As a result, the automobile owner now has the benefit of a public liability insurance rate for his automobile as low as any in a city similar in size.

The rate has been reduced here, while in many other cities it has been increased. Any reduction or increase de pends largely upon a reduction or increase in the percentage of death claims, based upon the number of in-surees, which the insurance companies have to pay in a city.

In the public liability policy the au omobile owner insures his car against killing a person. The automobile owner is liable for damages, and the insurance is a protection against the payment of damages for causing death.

Careful Driving, Insurance Less. Report Declares Auto Dealers Are Given License Plate Privilege.

UNTIDINESS IS CHARGED IN HALLS OF BUILDING

and their methods were included in three reports of the Bureau of Efficiency submitted to the Commissioners yesterday. Loose regulations concerning dealers' automobile licenses were said by the bureau investigators to discriminate in favor of automobile dealers, giving them a privilege no one else enjoys. Amendment of the traffic code was recommended.

Storage of automobile license plates in the corridor of the first floor was denounced as untidy, and Herbert D. Brown, chief of the bureau, pointed out to Proctor L. Dougherty, president of the board of District Commissioners, that he had failed to acknowledge a letter from the Crouse-Hinds Co., of Syracuse, N. Y., respectfully asking when they might expect delayed payment for electric traffic signals.

Concerning the dealers' tags, the bureau report says that motor car dealers are permitted to use the D tags on cars used in their business, which permits them to change the tags from one truck them to change the tags from one truck to another, a privilege extended to no other truck owner. The bureau not only suggests that this use of D tags be no longer permitted, but that dealers be required to keep strict record of the persons driving cars to which D tags are attached.

Plates Open to Theft.

The second report says that there are 7,500 pairs of license plates stored in the west and south corridors of the first floor of the District Building, and

Coombs myself about those tags a long time ago."

The next report, however, was on Dougherty. The first of the sums owing to the Crouse-Hinds Co. for traffic signals that were recently the subject of investigation, are in arrears two years. The corporation wrote to Dougherty asking when payment could be arranged for. Receiving no reply, the company wrote a second letter, and at the same time wrote to Brown, saying:
"It was our understanding that this was the proper method of procedure, but evidently not, as we have neither received payment for the signals nor an acknowledgment of our letter."

Brow. Jogged the memory of the Commissioner and informed him that he had written to the Crouse-Hinds concern that failure to acknowledge the letter was surely an oversight.

Levine Has New Rival.

Charles A. Levine and his French pilot, Maurice Drouhin, are likely to have a French competitor for their projected westward transatlantic flight, says the Petit Parisien.

The paper declares that Dieudonne Coste, who at one time held the long-distance record with Capt. Rignot, is said to be negotiating with the Belgian government for the loan of a Breguet machine in which Lieut. George Medaet, the Belgian aviator, was planning to break the present long-distance record. The machine is said to have a range of flight of about 5,000 miles. Coste, Petit Parisien says, will endeavor to hop-off before Droubin can get the Columbia ready.

Droubin's contract with Levine, under which he is to pilot the transatlantic plane Columbia back to America, runs for one year with compensation of $150,000, the newspaper L'Auto says to-

FELLOW MAIL PILOT TO GO WITH BERTAUD

Selected for Rome Flight When Wife of Leviathan Captain Bars Him.

New York, July 9 (A.P.).—A' fellow air mail pilot will occupy the navigator's seat in the giant Fokker monoplane Old Glory when it wings its way toward Rome with Lloyd W. Bertaud at the controls.

Commodore Herbert Hartley, of the Leviathan, who was offered the post by William Randolph Hearst, sponsor of the projected flight, left the decision to his wife, and she said "No."

Commodore Hartley received the offer by wireless aboard the Leviathan in midocean. He cabled from Cherbourg, France, saying the decision rested with his wife.

The Leviathan commander, who has crossed the ocean 800 times and is an authority on Atlantic weather, will help lay out courses for Bertaud to fiv.

Planes Must Fight Planes, He Says: Aircraft Guns Being Made More Proficient.

(Associated Press.) While the air still is full of report of projected airplane flights that even a few years ago would have staggered the imagination, the two American officials charged with administration of the Nation's military air forces have had time, nevertheless, to contemplate the value of what has been done this summer, and draw at least some preiminary lessons from it.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy War-

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Warner foresees in a future war the overnight conversion of America's huge ocean liners into airplane carriers which, under the protection of fast destroyers and light cruisers, would accompany the battle fleet.

F. Trubee Davison, Assistant Secretary of War in charge of Aeronautics, feels that the recent achievement of American airmen is a result of long years of development and that their accomplishments can not be attributed just to luck. He also believes that the transatlantic and Hawaiian flights have caused "increased appreciation" by the American people on the progress in aerial development and that "air mindedness" in the general public "means support and public interest in air development."

Limited by Arms Treaty

Mr. Warner said that while aircraft carriers now were limited by the Wash-ington arms treaty, in event of war nations undoubtedly would convert

Dragging of the bay near the Battery wall also was ordered in an effort to locate the other parts of the body and so possibly identify the woman.

Although the limbs were wrapped in cloth, the bundle when it was found contained an outer covering of heavy brown paper tied with strings. Deputy Inspector Carr of the Homicide Squad late today said this paper was found to contain a column of figures such as a grocer or a delicatessen proprietor grocer or a delicatessen proprietor night employ in summing up a list of

ACTION BY BERNSTEIN NOT OVER, SAYS LAWYER

Untermyer Asserts That No Negotiations Are Under Way for Settlement.

Yonkers. N. Y., July 9 (A.P.).—Emphatic denial that the libel suit brought by Herman Benstein, writer and publisher, against Henry Ford had been settled or that negotiations for a settlement were under way was made today by Samuel Untermyer, counsel for Benstein since the filing of the suit three years ago.

Untermyer, who is at his summer home here, refused to comment on Fords public retraction of his charges against Jews.

The attorney said that a notice recently had been served requiring Ford to testify in the action and that it was expected he would be examined soon.

Ford "Played Own Hand."

Detroit, Mich., July 9 (A.P.).—Indications that Henry Ford "did his own talking" and "played his own hand" in making his peace with the Jewish people were given added weight today with further evidence that none of the army of regular Ford legal talent participated in the overtures that led to the automobile manufacturer's apology for anti-Jewish writings in his Dearborn Independent.

In disavowing these writings Mr. Ford explained that the wide scope of his activities had made it impossible for him to devote his personal attention to the conduct and policies of his publication and that he was obliged to delegate their management to others.

In pregnitations with Jewish leaders to delegate their management to others.

In negotiations with Jewish leaders for a public repudiation of the hostile articles, however, Mr. Ford appears not only to have taken a firm hold himself but to have ignored the attorneys who represented him in the libel action of Aaron Sapiro, one of the outgrowths of the writings. It appeared also that Mr. Ford had ignored W. J. Cameron, editor of the Independent. Mr. Cameron on the witness stand in the Sapiro suit, assumed sole responsibility for the writings in the Ford periodical, saying that Mr. Ford declined to be drawn into a discussion with him of editoral policies.

Cameron Remains Silent.

today. Yesterday, immediately after publication of the Ford repudiation, he accompanied Henry and Edsel Ford on an "inspection trip" over the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Raliroad, Since then Mr. Ford has not been available to interviewers and Mr. Cameron has sent out word that he "has nothing to say."

While the attorneys who represented Mr. Ford in the Sapiro suit which ended in a mistrial renewed their statements that, to the best of their knowledge, the case would come up for retrial as scheduled, September 12, William Henry Gallagher, chief of Mr. Sapiro's counsel, stood by his statement of yesterday that he "confidently expected" a satisfactory settlement out of court. It also was disclosed that Walter F. Lynch, of Chicago, a law associate of Mr. Sapiro, who, Mr. Galsent out word that he "has nothing to say."

'It also was disclosed that Walter F. Lynch, of Chicago, a law associate of Mr. Sapiro, who, Mr. Gallagher said, had figured in the peace negotiations for more than two weeks past, still was in Detroit.

Aaron Sapiro, it was learned today,

Gallagher has been made public. That Mr. Sapiro would not insist upon pay-ment of punitive damages was indi-cated in Gallagher's statement that "Mr. Sapiro has always taken the position that he would never use any money overed by him in his law suit for his own purposes."

This led to the suggestion, neither confirmed nor denied, that the terms of settlement would involve payment by Mr. Ford of all the expenses incurred by Mr. Sapiro. This alone would in-volve a considerable monetary loss on Mr. Fords part.

Many Items of Expense.

Among the items of expense are:
Mr. Gallagher's fee for preparing the

HOME BY INLAND WATERS

Abandoned by the Navy, after a brilmy submarines off the French coast chased from the Government by the outs of Mount Clemens, Mich. Eighteen schoolboys are busily engaged guidance of William. J. Marshall, their port master, at the dock where the ship has been tied for several years, at Water and O streets southwest.

Upon completion of their work the boys, with Marshall in command, will sail the vessel to its new home port in Michigan, where it will be used as a training ship for the Sea Scouts, a branch of the Boy Scouts of America.

Yesterday the vessel shone spick and span in a new coat of gray paint, while the boys rigged up her wireless antennae. Marshall said that the motors, of which there are three, will need a thorough overhauling. It then will be dry-docked, scraped and painted below the water line and floated for its first voyage with the youtful crew.

The boys came to this city several days ago in a motor bus, which will be driven back, making stops in all ports touched by the vessel. The homeward voyage will be made through the inland waterways.

Eldorado, Ark., July 9 (A.P.).—Ffeen men were in custody at Camden, near here, today facing charges of riotous activities as a result of the wounding of a negro who was seized by a mob of nearly 200 men. The map was searching for an alleged negro assailant of a 19-year-old white girl.

Thad Stevens, 41, saw the crowd of enraged white men approaching and ran. When members of the mob called to him to halt and he failed to obey the order, he was fired on. The negro dropped to the ground, although he was not seriously wounded, and was seized by his pursuers. It was proven later, when the victim of the attempted assault failed to identify him, that the wounded negro was not the one sought.

TWO SUMMER CAMPS PROVE HUGE SUCCESS

TENTS RECEIVE NAMES

With the camping days of the first contingent of mothers and children at Camps Good Will and Pleasant almost cluded, the summer outing committee is preparing this week to take the cond delegations to the two camps.

Those in the second group to visit Camp Good Will will assemble Wednes-day at the Greenleaf School, under the lirection of Rosa Brown, district visitor of the Associated Charities, and those at the Phillips School, the Calvary Church Parish Hall and the Ambush School, under the direction of Camille DuBose.

The first visitors at the camps have had "the time of their lives," according to workers in charge. A graphophone was donated to Camp Good Will during the week by Samuel Fay Harper, of E. F. Droop & Sons. and this, with a radio installed by T. Lincoln Townsend vice president of the National Electrical Supply Co., kept the campers in good spirits. The swimming pool has proved one of the most attractive features of the camp, mothers and children spending hours in the water.

Additional contributions have been received by the committee for the naming of camp tents as follows: At Camp Good Will, "Jessie K. Kauffmann," by Mrs. Lewis N. Murray; "Col. Enoch Totten." by Howe Totten: Universalist Church of Washington, D. C., named by Ladies Aid Society Universalist Church, "Business Women's Council;" "The Quaker Tent," by Friends Sunday school. At Camp Pleasant, "Mary Ann Perry," by Elia E. Perry and Walter L. Perry, and "Colored Auxiliary of the Christ Child Society," by the auxiliary.

Study, Hikes and Sports Will Fill Days During the Entire Outing.

Showing the true American spirit— the spirit of the pioneer and home-builder, which enabled our forefathers to settle and develop our wonderful country, the Girl Scouts of the District have established a sanitary, orderly and plessant camp amid the ruins of a once famous military outpost at Fort Foote, Md.

Md.

The high bluff on which the camp is located affords a commanding view of the Potomac, the same view which caused Army officials to locate the fort there during Civil War times as one of the fortifications to protect the Capital of the Union from attack by water. The War Department having abandoned the fort several years ago, the Girl Scouts obtained a lease and if the location proves satisfactory, will attempt to purchase the ground as a permanent camp. One visiting the camp will hear the tattoo of hammers and grating of saws as the girls are busy manufacturing floors for their tents and signs giving directions about camp. Some of the tents were erected earlier in the week by Boy Scouts from Camp Roosevelt, but additional tents are springing up as new arrivals appear, and it is not an unusual sight to see a number of girls struggling with an unweildy tent pole and tugging at stubborn canvas.

The study of flowers, birds, trees rocks and stars; instruction in woodcraft; hikes, sports and rowing, consitute some of the things at which the scouts will pass their time. A pioneer camp, at which no improvements will be located, will be built a short distance from the main camp, and the girls will take turns living there to gain experience and knowledge of how to live with nature.

At the campfire every evening a council will be held to discuss the events of the day, and suggestions of how to improve the camp will be held. The camp and the entire spirit displayed there is traditional of the Girl Scout organization, with every scout cooperating and casting aside the thoughts of city life for a few weeks of real life in the open. It is as if in answer to the criticism aimed at the younger generation and in contradiction of the charges that the young girls of today will not do their share of work and can not enjoy herself without the tune of a jazz orchestra ringing in her ears. If there is a happier, the tune of a jazz orchestra ringing in her ears. If there is a happier, in her ears. If there is a happier, healthier and more willing group of girls anywhere, it must be in another Girl Scout camp.

Chicago, July 9 (A.P.) .- Play leaders employed with funds raised by Parent-Teacher Associations and business men's clubs are teaching children how to get the most out of their summer play in the city streets.
"Hey, kids! Here's the teacher to tell us how to roller skate and play sky blue us how to roller skate and play sky blue and ride our scooters!" is a common cry on the streets of Hyde Park, Chicago residential district, this summer.

The play leaders teach volley ball, baseball, roller skating, use of stilts, wagons, scooters and pushmobiles. Pet shows, a doll buggy parade, and hopscotch and jackstone tournaments are on the summer program.

The plan was suggested by C. H. English, supervisor of Chicago school playgrounds. Shares were sold at $1 apiece to raise $1.000 to finance the venture. The recreation guides have been dubbed "wandering play leaders" by Hyde Park parents.

The onrush of water was so powerful that roadbeds were washed away in many places so deeply that the tracks at a distance seemed strung in the air. Heart-rending scenes were enacted everywhere and children today were wandering in search of their parents, while distracted relatives and friends were trying to identify the victims of what was the worst flood disaster to strike Germany this summer, which al-

Must Support Them, French Recruit Says, but How, on Army Pay?

PRECEDENTS HUNTED VAINLY BY OFFICERS

Finally Premier Poincare Cuts Knot by Ordering Honorable Discharge.

(Special Cable Dispatch.) Paris, July 9.—Among the latest contingent of Frenchmen called to serve their quota of eighteen months military service was Pierre Drouaire. Pierre was young enough to be included in the call for service, but in some ways he was much older-principally as far as his family was concerned. So when Pierre Drouaire reported to the colonel at Clignancourt headquarters he was accompanied by his aged mother, his wife and five children.

"These seven people can not live except by what I earn," said Pierre, respectfully. "Since the army takes all responsibility for my work during the next eighteen months, I have brought my family along."

Colonel Is Perplexed.

The colonel looked very perplexed. Obviously something must be done, but quite as obviously nothing could be done until higher authorities had ordered it. Accordingly, he assigned Pierre to a company and found a house in the camp for Pierre's rather impos-ing family. Just how Pierre could support seven people on less than a franc a day the colonel didn't know any more than Pierre did. Therefore the colonel made a report to Gen. Girod, while Pierre drilled, hiked, passed as much time as possible with his mother, wife and five youngsters-and tried to figure out how one franc a day could be split among seven people.

Meanwhile the military authorities Meanwhile the military authorities examined orders and precedents and decrees in the attempt to get rid of this soldier with a family. But they could find no precedent. Never had a man reported for duty with a family of even three before, let alone seven.

Premier Orders Release.

Gen. Girod at last appealed to Prem-Gen. Girod at last appealed to Premier Poincare and the premier gave serious study to the unusual case of Pierre Drouaire. Finally he ordered that Pierre be given an honorable discharge that he might support his family—which he certainly couldn't do on a French soldier's wages. Pierre is back at his old job, turning over his pay to Mme. Drouaire, who is an expert in making 200 or 300 francs weekly clothe and feed eight people.

pay to Mine. Drousire, who is an expert in making 200 or 300 francs weekly clothe and feed eight people.

Plerre, however, doesn't want this misunderstood. If the government needs him he's ready to go again. Only be would like some avenuements made he would like some arrangements made so that the other seven won't have to go along to camp with him, too.

New Developments in Use of Protective Coverings Told at Institute Meeting.

Dr. Blum Presents Paper on Corrosion; Beyond Hope to Stop All Losses.

State College, Pa., July 9 (A.P.) .-The tarnish that appears on silverware treatment in process of manufacture if certain developments in protective coatings, now applied to other metals used properly, in the opinion of R. M. Burns, of the American Bell Telephone laboratory. He addressed the institute of chemistry of the American Chemical Society here today.

"Treatment of copper articles effectively prevents tarnish," said Mr. Burns, "and similar treatment applied to silverware should be equally effective. A film of oxide of copper so thin as to be invisible, and which prevents corrosion, can readily be produced in the manufacture of copper

Dr. Blum Presents Paper.

Progress in methods of application and use of metals as coatings for iron and steel is greatly reducing the annual loss to the Nation caused by rust, declared Dr. William Blum, of the Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C., in his paper on the "Control of Corrosion."

"Rust is wasting American wealth at the rate of hundreds of millions of dollars annually," he said. "Proper metallic coatings can prevent this waste largely, but it is beyond present hope to prevent all corrosion losses or to control all conditions, which corrode metals. Atmospheric exposure of metals is of course the most important of these. Fresh water, sea water, soil and stray currents in the ground caused by power lines are other factors that result in excessive corrosion."

Cadmium is one of the most desirable metals for coating when the base is subjected to marine exposure, said Dr. Blum, when appearance is not of prime consideration. Nickel and chromium platings are the best for protecting exposed steel where appearance is essential as in the manufacture of automobiles.

"The first international cable chess match between members of the United States House of Representatives and the British House of Commons opened in a blaze of glory and ended most satisfactorily for all concerned, both teams coming out with flying colors and honors divided. The American players especially must be commended for their gallant fight, as they had less experience than their opponents and were lacking the opportunities afforded to chess players by the English Parliament. Using Latent r...

The problem of utilizing manually the latent power in coal came to the institute last night for the first time when Dr. Eric K. Rideal, lecturer in physical chemistry at Cambridge University, England, discussed the manner in which the State should work with industry and science to solve such situations.

The reason no satisfactory solution has been found for the coal problem is due to the lack of cooperation between the university, the industry and the State, he said.

"The creating the first in the context is due to the British Parlian.

"The first plan suggested by the British committee was that five games be played, one man to be in charge of each game on each side, and each player having two assistants, making it in reality a consultation match. This was discussed by the fepresentatives, but was not approved, and the simpler form of five representatives against the same number of members of parliament, as in the previous matches by cable between the two countries, was adopted.

Competitive Showing Meade Training Quarters Pleases Dannemiller.

LARGER BATTALION IS SEEN NEXT FALL

Expectation Is Faculty Transfers Will Be Announced by August 1.

Camp Meade, Md., since June 11 are approaching the end of their month's training period.

Lieut. Col. Augustus F. Dannemiller, U. S. A., commander of the Georgetown unit, has been in attendance at Camp Meade since the opening of the summer training camp and is highly pleased with the competitive showing of the Georgetown Infantry Cadets. Capt. Stewart D. Hervey, one of his assistants, also has been detailed at Camp Meade.

The Georgetown group at Carlisle Barracks comprises about 40 students from the school of medicine who will qualify as first lieutenants in the Army Medical Reserve Corps at the end of their next academic year. The infantry contingent from the college numbers 28 junior cadets and two seniors. These will form the nuclus of the cadet officers in next year's infantry battalion at the Hilltop.

Reassigned Another Year.

Reassigned Another Year.

Since its designation as a "distinguished" unit interest in the R. O. T. C. has increased greatly among Georgetown students, and Col. Dannemiller is looking forward to an unusually large battalion next fall. Capt. Hervey and Capt. William B. Lowrey, who completed their four-year detail at Georgetown last month, have been reassigned to Georgetown for another vess.

pleted their four-year detail at Georgetown last month, have been reassigned to Georgetown for another year.

This will keep the training staff intact, for Col. Dannemiller has two more years to serve before being transferred to other duties. The two Georgetown seniors at Camp Meade, James Slavin and John O'Briefi, who did not have an opportunity to attend the camp last year, will receive commissions as second lieutenants in the reserves when they complete their training this week.

William S. Tarver, Washington student at the college, who was lieutenant colonel in command of the infantry battalion, has given up thought of a military career to engage in newspaper work. During his four years at Georgetown he made an outstanding record, not only in the R. O. T. C., but also in his studies, having been one of the honor men in the June graduating class. He was awarded the prize for being the cadet who did more than any other member of the infantry unit to advance the interests of the R. O. T. C. during his four years at Georgetown. Tarver expects to enter the law school this fall.

Next Commander Discussed.

Next Commander Discussed.

Next Commander Discussed.

In view of the unusual interest being taken in, R. O. T. C. affairs at the Hilltop, the selection of the cadet commander of the corps is subject to much speculation. The race, it appears, has narrowed down to John T. McKeen and J. P. Cummiskey, fr., both of Detroit, Mich., and William C. O'Neill, of Brooklyn, N. Y. They were conceded to be among the best trained of the cadet officers during the last year. McKeen already has a reserve commission as second lleutenant in the Army, having previously attended the regular training camp.

The Rev. Charles W. Lyons, president of Georgetown University, who returned here last week from an educational conference in New York, will remain in Washington, it was expected, until August 1. By that time the list of faculty transfers probably will be received. The Rev. Francis A. Tondorf, director of the seismic observatory, is taking his retreat at the Georgetown Preparatory School at Garrett Park, Md.

RICH PRINCE REFUSES TO PAY HIGHER RENTAL

Ruler of Monaco Says He Can Not Afford Big Sum at Channel Resort.

LOSES FAVORITE VILLA

Paris, July 9.- The Prince of Monaco, heir of the Grimalidis, and recipient of the rich royalty paid by the great gaming casino of Monte Carlo, is commonly supposed to be rich beyond all conceivable need of economy. Yet it appears that there is a limit to expenditures beyond which he will not pass. For years he has been in the habit of spending a certain season at a French resort of great exclusiveness on the channel coast, especially patronized by wealthy English families.

The Prince of Monaco has for a number of years rented one of the villas heir of the Grimalidis, and recipient of

The Prince of Monaco has for a number of years rented one of the villas there, and had until this year assumed that his occupancy of it would be perennial. He had not forecast the effect of plutocratic English patronage upon the rentals. This year, however, when he sought to renew his lease the landlord asked for so great an increase in the rental that he was constrained to decline it. "I can not afford to pay so much," he said frankly, "wherefore you will not see me there this season."

The other residents of the place are therefore wondering what rich shipowner or manufacturer will replace the sovereign who represents the oldest reigning dynasty in Europe.

OHIOAN DISTRESSED BY TREE DESTRUCTION

Ohio Representative Deplores Preservation Neglect by Business Interests.

"Persistent and wanton" destruction of trees in Washington is deprecated by Representative Martin L. Davey, of Ohio, a tree expert, in a letter to Mrs. Archibald Hopkins. He declares that "it is amazing that the commercial interests of Washington have so little regard for the preservation of the beauty that has made Washington what it is."

"It has distressed me very much," continues the representative, "to see the persistent and wanton destruction of trees in Washington. I have been equally disturbed by the obvious neglect of the street and park trees. Very little, if anything, seems to be done for them, and a very large per cent of them are going from bad to worse.

"The thing which has made Washington highly attractive has been its "Persistent and wanton" destruction "The thing which has made Washington highly attractive has been its wealth of fine trees. We are indebted to the foresight of men who lived 50 or 75 years ago for these trees. But we must blame our own generation for the terrible and inexcusable neglect from which many of them are suffering."

HOME OF VICTORIA. OSBORNE COTTAGE.

Tragedy of Romance Is Seen regulations. in Announcement of Its Transformation.

OFFERED TO BEATRICE AS WEDDING PRESENT

Edward VII Often Occupied One of Its Rooms, Both as Prince and as King.

(Special Cable Dispatch.)

that Osborne House, the favorite home of Queen Victoria, is to be transforme into a hotel is regarded as a tragedy of romance, though its original name (Oysterbourne) was not without some suggestion of such hospitable use. But the Isle of Wight home of the queen is so invested with associations of royalty, and also with the romance of royalties, that such transformation of it must come as a rude shock.

Though known as Osborne House and often called Osborne Cottage, it is in reality a large and splendid castle, quite in architectural keeping with its history and traditions. It will be re-called that Queen Victoria offered it to her daughter, Princess Beatrice, as a wedding present on her marriage to Prince Henry. It was there that the present Queen of Spain spent much of her infancy and griphood; it was there present Queen of Spain spent much of her infancy and girlhood; it was there that Alfonso XIII paid court to her, and there is still shown the arbor in which they often sat togsther, according to the English rather than the Spanish custom of woolng. Visitors are also shown the chamber in which Edward VII often slept, both as prince and king, and that in which the last Czar of Russia slept during a four days' visit.

Personages Planted Trees.

Then in the park there are to be seen the fifteen trees, each of which was planted by a royal personage. The first was planted by Victoria herself in 1871, and others were planted by Edward XIII, by George V, by Nicholas II, by Alfonso XIII and various other royalties.

The place has now passed into the royalties.

The place has now passed into the hands of she grandson of a peer, whose identity has been for the time kept secret, and it will be transformed into a luxurious hotel, to which it is expected many guests will be attracted by its historical, romantic and sentimental associations. Doubtless sentimental couples will wish to sit in the arbor where Alfonso XIII paid court to Victorian Eugenie.

Charlottesville, Va., By A. P.).—
Trapping earthquakes has become a regular business at the University of Virginia, where one of the most unique and sensitive seismographs in the country keeps a 24-hour watch for tremors.

A. J. Weed, who has charge of the seismograph in the Rouss physical laboratory, planned and built the machine with the help of engineering students. Unlike other seismographs, nowhere in it is there a pivot. Using ice as most families do, to serve with meions and olives, and shaved as a base for fruit snowballs and summer drinks, makes it imperative that the ice itself be pure, if health is to be protected.

Ice cut from lakes and rivers as it used to be in the olden days can rarely be offered to the consumer with an assurance of purity. But ice that is manufactured, as it is nowadays, may Manufactured ice is made of distilled water, and is therefore sterile. The process of manufacturing ice depends on the cooling effect of evaporation. Liquid ammonia, obtained by compressing ammonia gas, is run through pipes immersed in salt brine. The liquid ammonia, in process of changing to gas, absorbs great amounts of heat from the brine. Cans or tanks filled with pure water are immersed in the cold brine and left to freeze.

The care must not cease when the ice is produced. It must follow the ice to the wagon, and to the refrigerator. Here, again, the reliability of the ice company is a factor to be more scrupulously looked into by the housewife, who has responsibility for the health of her family. She is warned that ice must not be "just ice" to her, because many inferior kinds of ice are sold. The best value for one's money, in the case of ice, does not mean a large block for a little money, but, rather, it means protection from contaminated sources and from careless handling.

Block booking is treated in detail in the findings, with this statement in conclusion:

"The purpose and necessary effect of such distribution policy is to lessen competition and to tend to create a monopoly in the motion picture industry, tending to exclude from the market and the industry small independent producers and distributors of films and denying to exhibitors freedom of choice in leasing films."

The original complaint of the commission included besides Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Zuker & Lasky, six corporations and four individuals. The complaint was dismissed as to all of these. They were: Realart Pictures Corporation, the Stanley Co. of America, the Stanley Booking Corporation, Black New England Theaters, Inc.; Southern Enterprises, Inc., and the Saenger Amusement Co. and Jules Mastbaum, Alfred S. ## ORIGINALITY IN NEW WORK DONE BY NYE

By ADA RAINEY.

E DGAR NYE has been painting some pictures in a new manner which have the rare quality of which have the rare quality of originality to recommend them. Mr. Nys has the faculty of being plastic mentally. He never becomes stereotyped, certainly. He sees life and nature in an ever newer and changing way. There is no danger of his becoming fixed in his style. He is advancing in surety and broadness of vision and consequent strength of technique.

This is ever an element of interest This is ever an element of interest in any artist who seeks to progress in his work. The expression of life is never static; so the artist who is awake and sensitive to the changing moods and aspects of nature must perforce change his manner of painting if he would be thoroughly alive. This Mr. Nye does, and the result in his painting is tremendously interesting.

He has passed through the phases of the problems of He has passed through the phases of "impressionism" and the problems of light on the surface of things, and at present is interested in the problem of simplification. This means that the artist is seeking to create a work of art, to present an organic whole, unencumbered by superfluous details or mere photographic accuracy. His work becomes organic, an expression of his reaction to life, nature, cities, and is presented simply as it impresses the mind of the artist. This organic construction is vastly important and is the aim of many of the progressive men of the day. It means that there is no slipshod work; there is good drawing, fine construction and, in the case of Mr. Nye, a delicate and effective employment of color.

Color Is Adequate

Perhaps it is this sensitive reaction to the beauty of nature that is the most characteristic element in the work of the painter. Then the color is delicate and adequate at the same time.

In "Baltimore." one of the most recent and effective paintings, there is an opalescent tone which takes away what otherwise might be a certain hardness of impression and gives a surety of structure and power that is undeniable. "The Old Mill" again shows the simplicity of structure, fine organization, excellent drawing and vitality of color that makes a complete work of art which is satisfying. There is strength, a certain severity, fine composition and lucidity of atmosphere that is uncompromising and final.

Mr. Nye has the conviction to paint the surrounding country of Washington, the Eastern shore of Maryland and Pennsylvania. He works very quickly and often paints a large canvas in eight hours of steady work in the open country. Seldom does he do any retouching of his canvases. Consequently there is a spontaneity of feeling and thought that is never spoiled by being overworked. In "Baltimore," one of the most re-

Monument Painting

Monument Paunting
One of the most effective of his recent paintings is that of the Washington Monument seen towering above the surrounding buildings and streets. It is difficult to convey in words the impression of the best canvases. They are not merely buildings, boats, hills or seashore. There is an undeniable something of the spirit, of the emotions of the artist, which is the real interest no matter how this may be conveyed. But the manner, too, is the way of a master of his art, for this has been acquired through years of patient endeavor which must be the forerunner of everything worth while has been acquired which must be the patient endeavor which must be the forerunner of everything worth while forerunner of everything worth while in painting.

Other recent paintings are "Village Near Frederick," "Boats in Ice," "Trees and Hill," "King Street Bridge," "Rocks at Great Falls," "Pennsylvania Mountains," "Boats and Pool."

At the exhibition of the Society of Washington Artists last winter Mr. Nye received the prize for the best land-scape painting with the bronze medal for his painting called "The Port" and the year previously he received honorable mention. This recognition from a conservative society means that the work of this artist is gaining recognition from outside of the usual work of the society, tures are in many mediums from bromides to color photography. They are in advance on the photographs shown last year by the same society and range all the way from portraits, figure work to landscapes and evening pictures which show the brilliant lights of a great city against the midnight sky.

There are some moonlight views. There are some mooning to notably one by Lewis Smith, which is excellent. "Dream Vision," by G. Y. Younge, is most beautiful; others by the same artist are of high degree of eneral public in the great possibilities or photography. This recognition from a conservative society means that the work of this artist is gaining recognition from outside of the usual work of the society.

The conservative knows that his work is that of a master as well as the more forward looking artists and art lovers. It is to be hoped that Mr. Nye will soon have a one man show of his work and thus show what he is doing in a more comprehensive manner than it is possible to gain from single paintings seen at various exhibitions. His work is outstanding in a class by itself and it is unhesitatingly predicted that he will become widely known.

TELLS STORY OF OLD SPAIN

IN THE HEART OF SPAIN. By Thomas Bwing Moore, 400 pp. (The Universal Knowledge Foundation, New York.) The author of this delightful book Knowledge Foundation, New York.)
The author of this delightful book was a resident of Washington when he entered the foreign service under his cousin, James G. Blaine, Secretary of State. Mr. Moore was first secretary of legation and frequently charge d'affaires at Bucharest, Belgrade and Peking. During the first years of the war he was special assistant to Ambassador Thomas Nelson Page at Rome.
Mr. Moore resigned from the diplomatic service to enter the American Red Cross and served three years in France.
With a training similar to that enjoyed by Washington Irving a century before, with a kindred affection for Spain, and with an engaging literary style, Mr. Moore is especially qualified to present to his readers glimpses of romance and history that throws a poetic glamour over his writings.

It is with keen delight that one who has visited and reveled in the most picturesque parts of Spain now revisits them again in reading this book.
Mr. Moore not only succeeds in freshening sweet memories, but in enrichling them with bits of antique romance

Mr. Moore not only succeeds in freshening sweet memories, but in enriching them with bits of antique romance not known before. Ronda, Seville, Cordoba, Granada, Jerez de la Frontera, Palos, Cadiz—these storied places spring to life in this volume, and the famous characters who walked their famous characters who walked their streets are again living and acting.

The traveler sees what he takes with

The traveler sees what he takes with him. Many Americans visit Andalusia and utterly fail to appreciate its story or its charm, because they take with them no knowledge of its history and no understanding of its peculiarities. For such as these, Mr. Moore's book is infinitely better than a voyage to Spain. As seen through his eyes the region appears to be what it is—the abode of romance, the nesting-place of American discovery, the ancestral home of world-famed explorers. The reader is made to understand how closely that quaint corner of the world is related to himself.

Mr. Moore gives generous space to the work of archeologists in Andalusia, especially that of George Bonsor, who has spent more than 40 years in researches. His discoveries of Roman ruling and memorials have added much

The book is a treasure house of historical data, containing more than 1,500 Mustrations, many of them rare and little known and includes 250 portraits of Gen. Washington, many of them the work of renowned artists and more than 30 of them known to have been painted during his lifetime.

Altogether, they form a unique gallery of Washington pictures and invaluable for reference. For instance, the frontispiece of the book is an origsee further and practically establishes the site of Tartessus, the Tharist of the Bible. Tartessus was a flourishing seaport in 2000 B. C., and was visited by Phoenician ships in the days of King Solomon. Cretans, Trojans, and Phoenicians traded in metals at Tartessus, meeting there seamen who brought tin from Ireland and amber from Helgoland. Many signs point to the imminent discovery of the ruins of Tartessus, buried in the sands of the Guadalquivir delta.

Researches at Numantia, Mairena del Alcor, Carmona and Italica are also cpitomized by Mr. Moore.

The book is printed on ivory silkoot paper, with numerous beautiful illustrations and is bound in cloth, stamped with gold title and with the seal of the City of Seville. In form and contents its is a valuable addition to any library.

After Rupert Hughes' remarks about the character of Gen Washington it is frefreshing to read pages of "Washing-ton," by Joseph Dillaway Sawyer, the MacMillan Co., New York, written with the respect due to the great man live of the American Revolution. He traces in direct unbroken law to strangely enough to about the same period when America was discovered by Christopher Columbox. In less back still further to the days of William honored for the monumental work, "History of the Pilgrims and Puritians," previously written, and other the strain with the same period when America was discovered by Christopher Columbox. ## Military Warfare Acquired

Next we see Washington, the British colonial officer, learning the ways of military warfare and statecraft at one and the same time. There he laid the foundations of that military genius which amazed the world and which at which amized the work and which as first glance seemed so contrary to the nature of a Virginia planter. When his early experiences in the French and Indian wars are remembered, the reason for this talent becomes apparent. With 1759 came new developments in the life of Washington. The planter, in the life of Washington. The planter, the surveyor, the military man now became the legislator—the statesman in embro—and a married man. On January 6, 1759, Col. Washington became the husband of the sprightly, wealthy widow, Martha Dandridge Parke Custis, and four months later he took his seat as a burgess in the Virginia Assembly at Williamsburg. The scene when Washington first entered the legislative halls is well described by Mr. Sawyer:
"It is related," he writes, "that when washington entered the hall, the speaker, in recognition of the young officer's distinglished service on the border, welcomed him in the name of Virginia. Washington, abashed, at-border, welcomed him in the name of Virginia. Washington, abashed, attempted to reply, but speech failed him. Perceiving the young man's embarrassment, the Speaker proceeded to eulogize him with rare delicacy: 'Sit down, Mr. Washington. Your modesty is equal to your valor, and that surpasses the power of any language which I possess.'" passes the power of any language which I possess."

Then followed the happy days as a gentleman farmer at Mount Vernon, a bucolic life which greatly suited the simple temperament of Washington. The problems of agriculture occupied his mind and he was fond of experimenting with crops much as his neighbor of Monticello, Thomas Jefferson, who found a similar delight in new and delightful varieties of plants, flowers and trees.

Across the quiet life at Mt. Vernon attended the clouds of Revolution. Washington watched from afar, his, patriotic soul troubled and on fire at the ceaseless tyrannies of the mother country inflicted upon her colonies. His brave spirit could not tolerate injustice and he was a willing delegate to the first general Congress held in Philadelphia in 1774. This first Continental Congress was a significant step forward in the history of America. Its key note was sounded by the fiery words of Patrick Henry, "British oppression has effaced the boundaries of the several colonies. day and open vistas to past scenes down which the men and women of the present may visualize the gracious and gallant figures which appeared on the stage of America's youth.

The shelves of our libraries are filled with books chronicling the brave deeds of early colonists and Revolutionary heroes and the sagacity of statesmen who founded and sustained our Nation. Only here and there is brief mention made to the romance which prevailed in their lives and in "Half Forgotten Romances of American History," by Elisabeth Ellicott Poe (The Stylus Publishing Co., Washington), a welcome opportunity is pre-"Half Forgotten Romances of American History," by Elisabeth Ellicott Poe (The Stylus Publishing Co. Washington), a welcome opportunity is presented to read the love stories of the great men and the women who assisted them on their way to fame. In this way their personalities are vividity recreated for the men and women of 1927. With facile pen, Miss Poe has handled expertly the romantic phases with a due attention to historic facts. For several years these "Half Forgotten Romances of American History." have been appearing in The Sunday Washington Post and have elicited much favorable comment. It was in response to an insistent demand from a public acquainted with the Romances in the Sunday Post that they have now been put into book form.

Because of the historic value of these romances Miss Poe was invited by the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution to incorporate them in an illustrated lecture and which is now being released by that society for Daughters of the American Revolution thapter gatherings.

Among the romances included in the present volume are those of Columbus and Beatriz Enriquez, Sir Walter Raleigh and Elizabeth Throkmorton, William Penn and Gulleima Springett, Lafayette and Adrienne de Noallies, George Washington and Martha Dandridge Custis, Nathan Hale and Alice Ripley, Thomas Jefferson and Martha Skeiton, Betty Washington and Fielding Lewis, Edgar Allan Poe and Virginia Clemm, Abraham Lincoln and Ann Rutledge, Robert E. Lee and Mary Parke Custis, U. S. Grant and Julia Dent and Stonewall Jackson and Eleanor Junkin.

"De Cuttsheep From Miles Stand-ish" forms the "prolock" to Milt Gross' latest book, "Dunt Esk," just published by George H. Doran Co., New York. As in "Nize Bebby" and "Hiawatta," Gross writes in his unique style of Jewish dia-lect. Parodies, satires and a generous portion of "Poppa Wit Momma Feitle-baum Wit Looy" form the content of the new book.

The Oxford University Press, American branch, announces for early publication a "Memorandum on China and the Foreign Powers," by Sir Frederick Whyte. This Memorandum is an excellent and unbiased narrative of foreign influence in China from the earliest times to the present date, and a brief but searching analysis of the present problem in China. The collection of documents in the appendices should be valuable to any serious reader.

"Men of Destiny," a new book which will appear in August, has some striking things to say about Borah, Coolidge, Al Smith, Mellon, Wilson and House, and other prominent politicians, as well as certain literary figures that are much in the public eye, like H. L. Mencken and Sinciair Lewis. The author is Walter Lippman, who directs the editorial ter Lippman, who directs the editorial page of the New York World. Rollin Kirby, the famous cartoonist, has illustrated the book. It will be published by Macmillan.

A prize of $500 with two additional prizes of $250 each have been offered in a contest for the best poems on the subject of Lindbergh and the Spirit of St. Louis, which will be published, together with the hundred best poems, by George H. Mr. Sawyer has given us graphic high lights on the whole Revolutionary period with interesting facts before not generally known. For this act alone, if for nothing more, he deserves the thanks of patriotic Americans.

Hero Declines Crown

The heroic spirit of Washington was The heroic spirit of Washington was never better evinced than after the voctory was won, and a frenzied people, wild with delight, wished to place a crown upon his brow. Washington declined, he knew the right use of power. When made President he knit firmly the bonds between the colonies after having had a full share in the constitutional convention of 1789. While in office he made as good a President as he had a general and Revolutionar leader. There was no touch of earthly taint about his glory. He remains the supreme hero of godlike mien.

wide a knowledge of the woman's side here as it does over there.

Besides being a very good treatise on the women's viewpoint addressed to the women's side of the fence, this book has the added virtue of real literary value. The writer has displayed such a wide knowledge of the versatility of men and women writers that the book might well serve a dual purpose, as the presentation of the woman question and as a series of lectures on literature.

Altogether, the writer of this book thinks that man has made a very good True Crimson Hue

The dining room is a pleasing contrast to the rather formal spaciousness of the main rooms. It is paneled in dark wood, decorated ceiling and tall carved doors that are massive and of fine workmanship. Here the hangings are of the true Italian crimson brocade satin, a shade so difficult to obtain. There is a consol table of green marble surmounted by a red Jasper vase of graceful form. Above this is a large painting of the sixteenth century, by the Italian painter, Francesco Albany, of the "Death of Adonis."

Cyclones and Hail Strike in Canada

Calgary, Alberta. July 9 (AP.).-Cyclones, torrential rains and hall brought unestimated destruction and probable death to two widely separated districts of this province late yesterday and last night.

The most serious damage was wrought in the town of Rocky Mountain House, 125 miles northwest of here, where a cyclone and 12-hour storm carried away houses, unroofed.

nere, where a cyclone and 12-nour storm carried away houses, unroofed virtually all the business buildings, destroyed two hotels, and caused untold injuries to crops.

At Vulcan, 75 miles southeast of Calgary, a cyclone swept away buildings, telephone poles and fences. No loss of life has been reported.

23 INSTITUTE DELEGATES DEPART FOR CONVENTION

RESERVE DEBITS INCREASE

By F. W. PATTERSON Headed by I. J. Roberts, president of Washington chapter, American Institute of Banking, 23 local delegates departed last night to attend the annual convention of the national organization, at Detroit, July 11 to 15. In addition to the part taken by the Washington group in the activities of the convention, prominent parts in the program will be taken by local bankers. H. H. McKee, president, National Capital Bank, nationally recognized authority on the McFadden bill, passed at the close of the last session of Congress, will speak on the bill, while Frederick P. H. Siddons, secretary of the American Security & Trust Co., will make an address on the "development of trust department business."

of trust department business."

It is expected that more than 3,000 delegates will attend the convention. The American Institute of Banking, the educational branch of the American Bankers Association, has approximately 65,000 bank employes and officers as members, with more than 200 chapters scattered throughout the country. The Washington chapter, under the direction of wise administrations and with the full cooperation of the District Bankers' Association and the local institutions, has made demarkable strides since its organization 25 years ago, and has taken its place in the ranks of the leading chapters of the country. the educational branch of the American Bankers Association, has approximately 65,000 bank employes and officers as members, with more than 200 chapters scattered throughout the country. Where Railroad Securities Go.

Where Railroad Securities Go.

Additional railroad securities were acquired during 1926 by the class 1 railroads of the country to the amount of $389.205.289 following acquisition of $389.205.289 following acquisition of $200.256.105 in 1925, bringing the total railroad securities acquired for the two years to $589.461.392. These are the securities of minor carriers acquired by major properties for purposes of strengthening control or forwarding consolidation.

It should be noted that the total carb.

It should be noted that the total cash and Government bond holdings mounted to the huge total of $742.-990.280 at the close of 1926, compared with $770,309.634 at the end of 1925.

$90,280 at the close of 1926, compared with $770,309,334 at the end of 1925. Although there was a small decline additional railroad securities were acquired during 1926 to the amount of $359,205,289 following acquisition of $359,205,289 following acquisition of $200,256,105 worth in 1925. These figures are made public for the first time in an article on "Railroad Stocks—Where Are They Golng?" by Frederick Hanssen in the current issue of the Financial World.

"There have been included a number of railroad security purchases which have not been reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission." Says Mr. Hanssen, either because they are held by holding companies which are not required to report, or because acquisition was announced since the last of 1926. There are doubtless many similar asquisitions, either by subsidiary holding companies or by bankers for the accounts of various railroads, which have not yet been made public.

"The real significance in the sengity of railroad securities has taken place during the past two years, and that this condition has been brought about through the purchase by those who should be in the best condition to judge values, namely, the largest railroads in the country. This coverage and the purchase by those who should be in the best condition to judge values, namely, the largest railroads in the country. The country of the country of the country. alues, namely, the largest railroads in the country. This question of supply and possible future demand in the railroad stock situation," continues the writer, "is of great technical importance in the railroad market, and is in account to the railroad market. cal importance in the railroad market, and is in sharp contrast to what has taken place in the public utility and industrial stock situations, where the supply has greatly increased by new issues of various kinds in recent years. It may be well to stress again the point that in giving first place to railroad stocks in our lists of recommendations on values and not on merger prospects.

"As a matter of fact, the attitude of the Interstate Commerce Commission is a distinct disappointment, and it doubtless will require additional action by Congress and possibly by the courts to bring that body in line with the law of the land and the administration's desire for mergers."

Moroccan Tribesmen Surrender to French

Madrid, July 9 (A.P.).—Premier Primo de Rivera announced today that Slite chieftain of the Ketama Tribesmen in Morocco, has entered the French zone and surrendered with his followers. He received confirmation from the French commander and was of the opinion that Slite's surrender meant the collapse of the entire rebellious movement in Morocco which had been smoidering since Abd-el-Krim, the Riffian war lord, surrendered to the French.

Spanish activities in Morocco now will be concentrated on disarmament of the natives and the development of Morocco's agricultural and mineral resources. The newspapers, however, say this will not be an easy task; that considerable tact and patience will be required to carry out the program Troops will continue to be held in readiness for any emergency.

The early display of strength was maintained throughout the session with final quotations around the day's high and in some instances at new peak figures for the year. Ford Motor of Canada rose to the year's high mark at 500 on a 7-point upturn and American Road Machine established new quotations on the forward movement. Electric 'refrigerating issues continued heavy. Servel Corporation dropped to a low at 2½ and Electric Refrigeration 6s at one time showed a loss of 6½ points, selling to 61 and later tallying 2½ points.

Bonds generally held steady with prominent obligations slightly higher at the close.

HEAVY SELLING MARKS INDIVIDUAL STOCK ISSUES

FOREIGN EXCHANGE QUIET

Special to The Washington Post. New York, July 9 .- Irregularity and cross currents featured today's moderately active session of the stock market. All in all, the traders on the con-structive side had much the better of the day's business, which approximated but 650,000 shares.

Some heavy selling came into indi-vidual issues like Mack Trucks, American Brown Boveri, Electric Refrigera-tor and a few others. But pressure on these stocks was more than counteracted by operations for the rise in stocks like Mathieson Alkali, United Drug, Union Carbide, Air Reduction, Commercial Solvents B, New York Cencommercial solvents B, sew fork Central. International Silver, Manhattan Electric Supply, Gotham Silk Hostery, Tobacco Products A, Western Pacific, Wrigley, South Porto Rican Sugar, Reynolds Spring and others. In this group gains were accred ranging from 1 to 13 points.

No:dan and Nash were features of the utomobile group, on the upside. Nash-ille, Chattancoga & St. Louis experi-nced a further gain of 10 points atop if its gain of 20% points yesterday, bout a dozen new high records were cored.

Recognized leaders like General Motors, American Can. U. S. Steel, General Electric and others gave a very good account of themselves in the early trading, but some of them eased off, to finish the day with fractional losses. The first-named stock was an exception, however, closing 1½ to the good.

Many stocks in which the sales on an

Many stocks in which the sales on an average day run as high as 40,000 or 80,000 shares did not figure in a single transaction. Traders showed much in-terest in the bullish Government report transaction. Traders showed much interest in the bullish Government report on cotton acreage and the U. S. Steel Corporation's report on unfilled tonnage. Although the official interest rate for call loans over the week-end held at 4 per cent, some borrowers had arranged their accommodations outside as low as 3½ per cent, and many authorities predicted that the next few days might witness a break below 4 per cent in the official charge for the first time since February.

The advance in many stocks was carried on by the impetus of Friday's push rather than because of fresh news developments. With the attendance on the floor lowered by the week-end holidays and a natural hesitancy on the part of bear traders to commit themselves over Sunday, the bull pools found conditions pretty much to their liking.

Houston Oil now dubbed the

liking.

Houston Oil. now dubbed the "mystery stock." moved forward sharply to a new high level at 174½, then dropped back with equal rapidity to close at 168 for a net loss on the day of 4½. Most of the other oils were in supply and closed with small net losses.

Steel backed and filled, awaiting the June tonger fluers due after the tonnage figures due after the and General Motors reflected June tonnage figures due after the close, and General Motors reflected evening up of opposing speculative forces against the week-end recess. Gabriel Snubbers featured the motor accessories under buying inspired by the appearance of a careful analysis of the company's position by one of the street's leading houses. Rails on the whole swung within a narrow range, showing little change of importance. Impressive demand came into Nash Motors stimulated by the action of the board in ordering an extra dividend of 50 cents a share in addition to the usual quarterly payment of $1 a share. Buying was also influenced in a degree by the revelation that the company's earnings in the May quarter had held up close to those reported for that period a year ago.

Foreign exchange price changes were few in a quiet market. Sterling and French francs were stationary, but lire and pesetas rose, the latter some 6 points, on renewed buying.

UNFILLED ORDERS FOR STEEL INCREASE

First Gain Since December Is Reported by U. S. Corporation: Held Significant.

New York, July 9 (A.P.) .- For the in unfilled orders was reported today by the United States Steel Corporation in its figures for the end of June. The gain, while amounting to only 2,305 tons, was regarded as significant, inasmuch as a decrease of something like 150,000 tons had been generally predicted. The gain probably was due to some large orders, including a substantial tonnage of rails, taken near the end of the month.

Unfilled orders on June 30 aggregated tial tonnage of rails, taken near the end of the month.

Unfilled orders on June 30 aggregated 3,063,246 tons. The small increase compares with a decrease at the close of May of 403,191 tons.

The unexpected upward trend has occasioned some predictions in Wall Street that unfilled orders over the second half of the year will tend to advance. Better buying, notably in the Chicago area, is cited as an argument favoring this contention.

Steel shipments in June are estimated at 900,000 tons, against 1,150,000 tons in May, indicating incoming business of about 900,000 tons, against about 750,000 tons in the preceding month.

New York, July 9 (A.P.).—Formation of the Union Tobacco Co. for the manufacture of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco, sponsored by C. A. Waelan, D. A. Schulte, G. J. Whelan, H. S. Collins and Udo M. Reinach, is expected to be announced shortly. Tentative plans are said to provide for capitalization of 150,000 shares of 7 per cent class "A" stock, $100 par, and 1,500,000 shares of no par common.

Building and engineering contracts in June in territory East of the Rocky Mountains, including about 91 per cent of the country's total, broke all previous monthly records, reaching 8632.487,000. an increase of 15 per cent over May and 16 per cent more than June, 1926, the F. W. Dodge Corporation reports. This brought the total for the half year to 83,187,993,300, which is 2 per cent more than in the first half of 1926. Contemplated New York amounted to 8729,178,900.

It is estimated that the Atchison. Topeka & Santa Fe Railway saves $3,000,000 annually through a consistent study of timber treatment requirements along its right of way.

Prices on fertilizer materials had a Prices on fertilizer materials had a rising trend the past week, says the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter. The index number of prices, calculated by that publication, was 101.3 (100 in August, 1914) at the close of the week, compared with 98.4 a week earlier and 103.8 a year ago. Nitrate of soda was a strong feature of the market, due to scarcity.

Nåt profit of Nash Motors for the quarter ended May 31 was $5,566,281, equal to $2.03 a share on the common, against $6,010.824 in the same quarter last year, or $2.20 a share. Profit for the six months was $9,491. 735. equal to $3.47 a share on the common, against $10.148,332 or $3.71 a year ago. An extra dividend of 50 cents a share on the common was declared with the regular quarterly of $1, both payable August 1.

Current assets of Union Oil Co., of California, on June 30, amounted to $54,000.000, a decrease of $2,300.000 from December 31, says W. L. Stewart. president. Current assets are about six to one of current liabilities. Crude oil and refined products in storage approximated 20,350,000 barrels. Total indebtedness was decreased. in the half year

Based on the consumption of electrical energy by about 2.500 manufacturing plants, using a combined total of about 14,000,000,000 kilowatttotal of about 14,000,000,000 kilowatthours of energy per annum, the volume of production during June was 8.4 per cent higher than in June last year, says Electrical World. The usual seasonal drop in production in industry as a whole appears to have been greatly minimized in comparison with past not stand their ground long enough to be belted.

June shipments of locomotives from the country's principal manufacturing plants were 89 against 109 in May and 159 in June last year. The total for the half year was 570 against 901 in the same period of 1926.

Larry Gaines, a 175-pound Senegambian from Canada, was the other new man in the line-up. Larry gave Jack a fine workout. His speed and awakward style of milling bothered Dempsey no little. Jack tried hard to level Larry with left shots to the pantry, but the colored lad refused to be knocked down.

It developed today that Dempsey has been taking unfair advantage of his sparring mates. He is belting them around with 14-ounce mittens while they have been equipped with gloves two ounces heavier. It might be a better thing for Jack if the order was reversed.

LEVELAND, July 9.—The Nationals scored their fourth successive victory over the Cleveland ball team by winning both games of today's doubleheader. Walter Johnson pitched a masterful game in winning the second contest, 3 to 2, after Washington had won the first, 6 to 5, in the thirteenth inning when the deciding run was forced over the plate by Willis Hudlin, Cleveland pitcher.

Washington pitchers stood out as hences in the contests. In the first game, Garland Braxton, who has participated in 30 games but generally for a mate's benefit, finally received credit for a victory. And he earned it, for he hurled the last six innings, during which he held the Indians to but a single hit.

Ruth protested during the third inning of the first game, while the Bengals were at bat, that the spectators on foul territory in left field were running out to get the balls before he had a chance to get to them. Miller Huggins joined in the complaint to the umpires, Huggins demanding that Umpire Owens see to better policing of the field.

The Babe then appealed directly to the police in the left lot to exert greater vigilance while the crowd goodnaturedly hooted him. More police were dispatched to his sector and the game proceeded after a five-minute delay.

Fields this afternoon, while 25,000 fans cheered their tribute.
Chance Play, the 4-year-old son of Fair Play—Quelle, displaying an abundance of speed, was master of the race from start. His victory almost was a repetition of Zev's Kentucky Derby victory in 1923. Sande, the master rider, came West at the last minute to ride Zev and won. Today, Sande came from New York to ride Mrs. A. W. Harriman's great chestnut thoroughered, and again he got what he came after.

Flat Iron, something of a champion in Kentucky and Illinois racing this season, finished sec-ond, almost two lengths back of the flying Sande. Princess Dorect weakened in the stretch, and was barely able to save third place.

Frederick Johnson, who used to own the Belair stud, paid $5,500 for Quatrain when the gelding was a yearling, and it looked like money well spent. The colt was royally bred, a son of Omar Khayyam and Bonnie Mary, and Omar Khayyam was sending good colts and fillies to the races.  Down to New Orleans went Quatrain as a 3-year-old. He started once and won his race as a 2-year-old, but it was at three years that he reached the heights and held them for a fleeting time. He came and conquered at New Orleans in 1925. VERY race horse can't be a Man o' War, but once in a while one makes himself almost as famous as the superhorse, though for an entirely different reason. Such is Quatrain. This aptly named son of Omar Khayyam is famous, or perhaps one should say notorious, for the reason not that he wins races but that he doesn't win them.

not that he wins races but that he doesn't win them.

When Quatrain was left at the post the other day in a claiming handlesp at the current Aqueduct meeting, racing men turned to each other, smiled and wondered. Quatrain doesn't win races. Oftentimes he doesn't even finish, but he still goes to the barrier.

This 5-year-old is one of the bad boys of racing, the black sheep of the Greentree Stable, and if those who speculated on him since his downfall with worful results to their bank rolls had their way Quatrain would be between the shafts of a milk wagon, a thoroughbred parlah.

horoughbred pariah. Quatrain's career has been one of brief success and many failures, some of them grotesque. No one can say that those who have trained him have not been patient with the horse, especially Vincent Pow-ers, who has been trying to make something out of him for Mrs. Payne Whitney's stable.

Trainer Powers has started Quatrain both in steeplechases and on the flat with equal success; that is, none at all. From Kentucky Derby favorite in 1925 to being left at the post in a claiming race in 1927 is an ignominious descent, but that has been the fate of Quatrain.

ROBIN A. C. IDLE.

men who make winter books on the Derby nodded their heads and made Quatrain favorite to win the Ken-tucky classic.

Quatrain was in his glory, but it was a glory soon to fade. Right up to a couple of days before the Derby he looked in wonderful condition and on Derby day at the old Churchill Downs course he strode haughtily to the post the 9-to-5 favorite, with wagers of thousands of dollars on him.

At the finish it was hard to find Quatrain. They couldn't find him in the first three, and a good many other horses finished before he was seen staggering home. He finished twelfth in a field of twenty, and his sun had set. Many racing men didn't know it then, but they are sadder and wiser now.

then, but they are sadder and wiser now.

Quatrain apparently wasn't a good leser. Being a beaten favorite in the greatest American racing classic is a hard blow and it seemed to sour Quatrain. He did nothing worth while after the Derby that year, but Johnson still had faith in him.

The following year Quatrain went again to the races, but his temperament had not changed. He still was grouchy, sulky and sour. At Belmont Park he went to the post an 8-to-5 favorite. The players knew he was a bad actor at the post, but they figured he would win in spite of this. They figured wrong.

He never left the post, and he was left behind in his next two starts, being almost faced the other way. Whenever he did start he ran poorly. Once he did finish second in a three-horse race. That was his best.

Finally Johnson let Quatrain go and Powers took him in hand. He was big and rangy and Powers decided to make a jumper out of him. The rest of the story is known to all racing men. In his first start as a steeplechaser this spring Quatrain was left at the post, an old story. In his next he fell while leading, and in his third he ran out while leading, the was favorite that time, but he passed a dividend. So back to the flat racing he has gone, and he has run last and been left at the post since then, but he hasn't stopped eating Greentree Stable oats. stopped eating Greentree Stable oats, not even yet. Such is the fame of Quatrain.

Al (Truck) Miller, Harvard's 200pound sprinter, carried off the 100-yard dash, defeating Bayes Norton, of Oxford, former Yale captain, but the crimson star finished third in the "220."
The only other American triumph on the track was scored by "Mac" Smith, of Yale, in the 3-mile run.

The invaders carried off three of the four field events, two of them in record-breaking fashi. Sabin Carr, Yale's holder of the world pole vault record, achieved 13 feet, to displace the best previous British mark of 12 feet 9 inches.

This height, however, only equaled Carr's record for the meet, made in 1925 in the United States, and was a foot short of his own world's record. Charley Pratt, Harvard football captain, broke the meet record for the shotput with a toss of 44 feet 5 inches, while George Deacon, of Yale, won the broad jump to complete the list of American hopes were the defeat of 'Red' Haggerty, Harvard captain, by D. G. By RICHARD S. TENNYSON.

THIRD CAVALRY, of Fort Myer, created the unexpected yesterday when it battled the highly touted War Whites to an 8-to-8 tie in a thrilling pole match on the Potomac Park oval. A spectacular seventh period tied the Cavalry Four after it had led for three quarters of the game. Cavalry's two-goal handicap does not minimize its achievement the slightest.

The most scientific and perfect pole ever viewed on the Potomac Park oval was witnessed in the seventh chukker when the Whites deadlocked the score. Capt. Houghton, the individual star of the match, made a 40-yard drive near the close of the period that carried several feet outside the Cavalry posts.

From the published accounts of the affair it appears I said Mr. McTigue dogged it for twelve rounds and would have samped out of the ring but for the fact that the promoters would have impounded his purse. Mr. McTigue, although Irish, is decidedly McTavish by

As I look back on it I wonder how

M'GRAW URGES ABOLITION OF PUT-OUT ON FOUL FLY

Giant Leader Advocates Change

Regulation Height for Mounds Seen as Necessity.

By JOHN J. M'GRAW. Manager, New York Glants. Nanager, New 1078 Giants

New YORK CITY, July 7.—To my way of thinking the game of baseball is about ripe for another change in the rules and I have two suggestions for improvement that I'd like to offer for the consideration of the rule makers, the players and the fans.

With the situation in the two big league races practically unchanged over July 4, the turning point of the sea-son, this strikes me as a good time to son, this strikes me as a good time to offer my plan.

The purpose of my suggestion of course, is to improve both the hitting and the pltching and at the same time to eliminate, as far as possible, the element of chance. Luck of "the breaks," as we call them, always has been too big a factor. I think.

I have considered these proposed changes for a long time and am convinced that the game would be materially benefited even if the idea is decidely radical.

In the first place, I would eliminate the foul ball entirely as a factor in the game, except that the first two count as strikes. The foul strike rule tends to speed up the game and should be retained.

In all other respects foul balls should not be considered a part of the game at all. In other words, a ball that is not hit in fair territory would not be in play. Whether it was caught or not would make no difference. This, as you will see, would tighten up the game.

a ball that is not hit in fair territory would not be in play. Whether it was caught or not would make no difference. This, as you will see, would dighten up the game.

No time would be lost in chasing fouls and no players would be hurt, running into the stands. A foul would be simply disregarded no matter where it went, and play proceed.

This rule would eliminate a lot of luck as a factor. The foul ball is never an intentional play, and therefore, should mean nothing in the game. Every day nearly you see some batter pop up a foul sometimes accidentally that is caught, right in the midst of a rally.

It is also the case sometimes that a fleider will intentionally fall to catch a long foul so as to prevent a runner on third from scoring. Such plays often have an important bearing on a ball game, when, as a matter of fact they are accidental and not a part of the plan of attack or defense.

For example, all questionable plays like that of Grabowski falling into the dugout while Cobb and Collins scored and the umpires were in a quandary could be avoided.

There would no longer be any need for the many ground rules in the parks when the stands are at varying distances from the plate.

Revolutionary as it may sound, I feel sure that the try are avoid the plane of the parks when the stands are at varying distances from the plate.

Revolutionary as it may sound, I feel sure that the game would be immensely improved by simply cutting the foul ball out of the rules at one stroke. Fans, I be-lieve, will agree with me that the foul ball means absolutely nothing. A base hit is a definite achievement. A fielded fair ball is the result of training and study.

In fact, it is not exactly fair to a batter's average to have it affected by a foul ball that happens to be caught. Another batter may hit a half dozen fouls and have none of them caught. His average is not affected at all. There is an illustration of the part luck plays by having foul balls in play.

Years ago we used to hit fouls purposely so as to wear down the pitchers. That trick was stopped by adopting the foul strike rule. There is no longer any reason at all for the foul being a part of the game.

I realize that it is very difficult to make a radical change in the rules but I have hopes that this suggestion will be considered. Some day it may be adopted.

My second suggestion, the ob nly second suggestion, the out-vious purpose of which is to stand-ardize pitching and particularly to develop new pitchers more rapidly, could be adopted without a change in the rules.

I think the major league should appoint a man, preferably an engineer, and if possible a former ballplayer, to make regular inspection of all the diamonds in the different parks and see that the pitching mounds are exactly the same, both as to elevation and distance. I venture to say that right now no two of them are the same.

I doubt if the fans know how this affects pitchers, particularly young ones.

Often they get in a new park and find themselves unable to get the ball high or low, and do not know the reason why. In many parks the pitcher's mounds are built up six or eight inches higher than in others. The result is that the pitcher finds himself pitching down hill. In some parks he feels as it he were pitching out of a hole in the ground.

In years gone by it was considered a smart trick to change the elevation of these mounds over night so as to worry certain pitchers. And it worked too.

With a competent engineer to con gins seems to have a corner on four-base hitters, his collection undoubtedly being the greatest the national game has ever seen. This makes managing a pleasure this season for the mite leader of the "Big Towners," but it cer-tainly is spelling trouble for Col. Jack Ruppert, the owner.

Before long, the fans will be "fed up" on four-baggers which, after all, in many parks are merely glori-fied bunts. And when this time comes, Col. Ruppert's high-priced cast will be a "white elephant" on his hands.

The root of the evil is Lou Gehrig. While a source of much joy at present, Gehrig's home-run hitting easily can be visioned as a source of embarrassment later. Already it has destroyed the balance of power in the American League, making the Yankees top-heavy. And, if Gehrig continues smacking home runs, the value of Babe Ruth will suffer a depreciation.

Ruth is now drawing $70,000 per annum on a three-year contract because of his ability to crack out "round trippers." Should Gehrig "out-Ruth" him this season, Lou will expect a tremendous increase. Then, Ruppert still will have Meusel, Combs, Lazzeri and others with home-run marks at which the seater. The root of the evil is Lou Gehrig.

Games in which the Yankees participate seem to be lone exceptions, and even at these, the fans apparently attend expecting the team to win. In other words, any competitive doubt appears to be lacking, the customers being willing to pay the price simply to watch Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig in their race for home run honors.

At this writing, baseball "addicts" as a small fortune as the purchase price.

The Yanks probably will not do this, but a step of this kind undoubtedly would do baseball in general a lot of eld, with two out, in the ninth round Otherwise the veteran looked like the master of old, just breezing along from start to finish. He fanned eight during the contest, two in a row in the second and four in succession in the sixth and seventh when he whifted the side in the seventh after he had struck out Myatt to end the sixth.

It was the Indians who took the lead and the Nats who did the overtaking in the second contest. In the opening frame Johnson walked Jamieson, first up, and he took second on a helpful out and registered on Summa's liner to left.

Miller did not grant the Nats a hit until the fourth, when they clustered three for as many runs. A walk figured in this relly, Speaker coaxing it with one on the shelf. Goslin's double propelled him to third, and Judge inserted a liner to center which counted the pair. Judge went to third on Bluege's single and scored when Cullop raced back to the centerfield wall for Reeves' sacrifice.

The Tribe threatened mildly in its half when, with one out, J. Sewell doubled and Myatt walked, but Johnson easily disposed of the next two batters, fanning one. Miller did not grant, the Nats a hit

Nats' eighth when Spurgeon's error, a walk to Stewart and Speaker's sacrifice put men on third and second with only one out. Miller, who had granted no hits since the fourth, then put on the brakes, forcing Gosilin to foul to Myatt and Judge to loft to Jacobson.

Bluege's attempt to steal third cost the Nats a run in their ninth. He was on second as a result of his walk and Berger's single and one was gone when he foolishly tried to pilfer the sack. Johnson then singled, but he and Ber-ger were left when Hodapp threw out Rice.

The Nats should have won the first game in regulation time, for they gave Burke an early four-run lead. The young Washington pitcher weakened in the home fourth, however, and the Tribe tied the score, forging to the front in the next inning, which saw Marherry rushing to Burke's received. Marberry rushing to Burke's rescue

Cleveland's one-run lead stood up until the ninth inning, when a timely single by Joe Judge tied the score. Washington won in the fourth extra inning, when the de ciding run was forced over the plate by Willis Hudlin, who walked Ruel with the bases full. Hudlin went the route for the home team

Sam Rice, who obtained five hits, including a double, in this contest, started the Nats on their first rally with a single, prying the top off the third canto. Then Hudlin hit Harris and Rice scored and Bucky reached third on Speaker's single. Stewart replaced Harris on the bases and scored while the Spurgeon-J. Sewell-Burns combination was executing a double killing.

In the fourth Ruel and Bluege singled uccessively, bu made no progress un-il Rice came to the tee, when he poled out a long double to left center which cored the pair. Then the Tribe went on the warpath.

With one out, Burns doubled and Burke then filled the sacks by passing two. Cullop's lusty single propelled Burns and J. Sewell home, while a two-base clout over Goslin's head emptied the sacks and tied the score.

In the fifth, again with one out, the home team took the lead, successive doubles by Burns and J. Sewell turning the trick. This rally rhought Marberry into action

It was not until the ninth that the Nats were able to solve Hudlin again. Then they not only tied the count, but came within an ace of winning then and there. With one out. Stewart's single, Speaker's double and an intentional walk to Goslin filled the sacks. Judge lined a single to center, scoring Stewart with the tying run and putting it up to Ruel. He hit into a double play.

Neither team threatened until the Nether team threatened until the twelfth, when Bluege and Reeves, who singled, were left, while a double slaying helped the Nats out of a hole in the lower half.

Rice's fifth hit opened the thirteenth and it was turned into the winning run. Stewart sacrificed Rice to second run. Stewart sacrificed Rice to second and Hudlin was instructed to pass both Goslin and Judge, filling the sacks. Having acquired the habit, Hudlin couldn't immediately get out of it and when he gave Ruel four wide balls, the first three in succession, he was beaten, for the Tribe went down in order in its half of the frame.

Detroit, July 9.—The White Sox players' contention that Yankee Stadium was built to order for sluggers of the Gehrig-Ruth-Meusel-Lazzeri persuasion evoked little more than ribadial aughter in the Yankees' camp tonlight. Indeed, the keener-witted of the leaue champions insisted that the story was straight humor or an attempt at it and gave the rank and file of their once-threatening rivals credit for more intelligence than making any such claim would indicate.

"Baseball is a funny business," said Babe Ruth. "But baseball writing if funnier. I'm an author myself and I know. What the boys will do in the pinch for a rainy-day or off-day story is a caution.

These dirt highways, vaguely seen by visiting outfielders racing with an effort to keep their eyes on the ground and the sky at the same time, are a tremendous handicap, but are more desirable than the grass section of the outfield trick.

"Then there's that short right field fence near the foul line. Lou Gehrig and Babe Ruth built that contraption with their own hands, following a series of surveying tests based on graphs of their hits in recent years Of course, they don't move back the fence when visiting batters are at bat, but there's no getting away from the fact that the fence slants just right for the Gehrig-Ruth type of hit, but is not adaptable to other stances and techniques.

CAPITAL NOW SPEED BOAT CENTER

President's Cup Regatta Sept. 16-17 Is Year's Classic.

THE President's Cup regatta on the Potomac September 16 and 17 will be the grand finale of motor boat racing in America for the year 1927, according to advices received here from Frederick Still, president of the American Powerboat Association.

In a letter to Commodore Conrad C. Smith, of the Corinthian Yacht Club, the chief executive of the organization that governs speedboat racing in this country declared that Washington had been selected virtually by acclaim as the future center of the sport. The President's Cup regatta, inaugurated last fall, will be to boat racing what the world series is to baseball, he said.

Every outstanding motor-driven racing craft in the country will be sent here to compete for the President's Cup, sponsored by President Coolidge and from which the regatta takes its name, and the Dodge Memorial trophy, one of the most coveted speedboat prizes in the world.

The Dodge memorial race for-years has been a classic. Hereto-fore it has been held in conjunction with the Gold Cup race, an event which has been assigned to the city which produced the boat that won it in the previous year.

Thus, a precedent will be set by holding the big race in Washington. The Dodge trophy was placed in competition by Horace Dodge as a memorial to his father.

It is understood that L. Gordon Hamersly, who won the President's Cup last fall with his $60,000 all-metal boat, the Cigarette IV, will defend his laurels. It was rumored that Hamersly would dispose of the renowned Cigarette, but it is said now that his bride of a few months will drive it in a special rore for worten pilots and that Hamersly again will enter it in the President's Cup event.

Members of the Corinthian Yacht Club, the host organization, have taken a flying start in prepa-ration for the regatta, but share with the Nation's Capital the re-sponsibility of making it a com-plete success.

"The Corinthian Yacht Club," Commodore Smith said last night, "merely is lending a guiding hand. The President's Cup regatta is an affair that concerns the entire city. Upward of 75.000 people witnessed the races last fall, and there probably will be many more who will enjoy the next regatta. "Those spectacular races of the first President's Cup regatta evidently created considerable enthusiasm over the sport here. Washington will be far more strongly represented in the coming regatta than it was in the last." Commodore Smith is general chairman of the regatta: Vice Commodore William A. Rogers, chairman of the regatta committee; Andrew D. Porter, vice chairman; Lieut. Stephen Yeandle, of the Coast Guard, vice chairman; Rudolph Jose, vice chairman; E. C. Baltz, secretary-treasurer; J. Gilbert Dyer, chairman of the entertainment committee, and William F. Seals, chairman of the publicity committee.

BRITISH OPEN INTEREST CENTERS ON BOBBY JONES

Scots Revere American Golfer

Defending Champion Puts on Finishing Touches for Play.

Tournament to Open Tomorrow; Nabholtz in Spotlight.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, July 9 (A. P.).—Bobby Jones, fighting to retain his British open championship, is the all-absorbing center of interest in the classic British tournament which starts here in the ancient home of golf on Monday.

There are 208 other competitors, but the young Atlantan is the real golfing crusader, and if they held popularity contests in Scotland, Bobby Jones would easily be the victor.

The American flag files over his hotel as if he were a foreign ambassador, and the other buildings at St. Andrews display it also as a courtesy. His picture is flashed on motion pict re screens nightly and gets spontaneous applause. After each practice round he is the center of a struggling mass of Scottish bairns seeking the autograph of the great golfer—and in Scotland there is no one greater than a great master of the ancient game.

Jones put the finishing touches on his practice yesterday with a round of 70, which was the record for this year's practice until George Duncan today turned in a 69. Tomorrow Jones plays at Gleneagles, and early Monday morning plays his first qualifying round on the "old course," where the championship proper will be decided.

On Tuesday he plays his second ualifying round on what is known as "new course."

Jones is not the lone American at St. Andrews. There are a half dozen of his countrymen here, including Jim Barnes, himself British champion only two years ago, and Bill Mehlhorn, Joe Kirkwood and Larry Nabholtz, but they don't attract the attention Jones does on the course.

Nabholtz, however, attracted much Nabholtz, however, attracted much attention today by sending one of the longest drives ever seen at the eightenth hole. It was over 300 yards and brought a round of applause from the crowds. Nabholtz finished off the hole with a deadly pitch and a putt for a birdle 3. It was the fourteenth 3 that he had in two rounds today, but a number of bad holes kept his aggregate in the seventies in each round. It is almost impossible, however, to get anybody at St. Andrews to talk about anybody but Jones and his chances in next week's tournament. chances in next week's tournament. Last year he came over with the Walker cup team and stayed to win the British open at St. Annes-on-the-Sea. That made three titles to his credit. Then young George Von Elm wrested the American amateur crown from him, while Tommy Armour took the American open title at Oakmont and Jones has refused to become destitute of golfing honors without a fight. chances in next week's tournament.

Just how great the odds are against his accomplishing the goal of his journey to Scotland are indicated by the records which any strip of a lad or lassie here in St. Andrews, where golf is the life of the town, is willing to quote for any inquirer. for any inquirer.

No amateur ever has won the British open championship at St. Andrews since it became a 72-hole event in 1892, and only twice in all the years before 1926 has an amateur won it anywhere. Both times it went to Hardell Hoylake in 1897. And not for more than twenty years has any golfer accomplished what Jones is attempting, namely, to win the title twice in succession. James Braid did it in 1905 and 1906. And you can't get very heavy odds that Bobby Jones won't do it in 1926-27.

AMERICAN QUARTET IN QUEST FOR BRITISH OPEN GOLF TITLE

Trial of New Football Rules In Actual Games Is Awaited

was a state of the distance of College and High School Coaches Eager to Experiment: Changes in Baseball Few as Compared to Other Sports.

By ARTHUR A. HEYWOOD.

By ARTHUR A. HEYWOOD.

In about six or eight weeks, the call for football candidates will be posted by the various colleges and high schools and in but a short time thereafter the effect of the recent change in the football rules will be known.

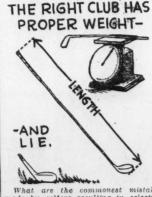

The change which will have the most revolutionary effect upon the game is the rule which permits lateral passing. The rule ordering the goal posts to be moved back to the end zone will have little or no effect upon play, except in the attempt to score points after touchdowns, by drop or place kicking.

Likewise, the coming basketball season was to have been faced with a radical change in rules, that of limiting the dribble to a single bounce. The national rules committee rescinded the rule, following a stormy protest by coaches throughtout the country and the decision of the professional courtmen to ignore the ruling. Though the rules committee lifted the ban on the dribble for one year, the rule bids fair to become a permanent change.

In view of the many changes that basketball and football have undergone since their inception, it is most interesting to stop and reflect on the unchanging character which baseball has maintained since it has been played.

This is doubly unusual, inasmuch as the other sports are constantly changing in rules and mode of play. Examples of these changes are the many variations in the game of football, Phils Beat Reds, 12-11; starting with the introduction of the forward pass in 1906 and culminating

From Tee.

If golf in Paris I should play.
I'd revel in some bouillabaisee,
Or if I were in Germany,
A foaming stein I would embrace.

In India some curried rice
Would be my daily provender;
In Mexico upon the links,
Chili con carne I'd prefer.

In Russia—if they play golf there— I would indulge in caviar; In Cuba, with Bacardi rum, I'd sure play every hole in par.

And yet, with all the world to choose, Where golf and eating intertwine, I'd rather play in Norfolk, where The soft shell crabs are superfine.

The fact that there were over a hundred entrants in the qualification round for the public links championship last week—the largest the increasing interest in public golf in this section. More than this, with over 200 municipal and semipublic golf courses now established in practically every State in the Union, and skillful players, it will be difficult to keep the entry list for the national championship at Cleveland during the first week in August within reasonable limits. The qualifying scores are certain to compare favorably with a national amateur event.

When George J. Voigt, A. L. Houghton, Earl McAleer, Wm. J. Cox, John C. Shorey, Page Hufty, Harry G. Pitt and other leading public links golfers graduated into private clubs, it was feared Washington would fall far behind other cities in its public links representation. This fear has been shown to be without foundation.

Both East Potomac Park and

Both East Potomac Park and Rock Creek Park are producing golfers who give promise of ability to carry the banner of the National Capital with credit through any national public links championship.

It is true that the Harding intercity team match trophy has only been won once by a Washington team, nor has a Washington player ever won the championship, although Earl McAleer was medalist in 1924. There is every reason to believe, however, that some of the District public links golfers who are climbing the ladder of expert golf will eventually be able to win the title.
The course selected for the sixth amateur links championship at Cleveland is the Ridgewood golf links, situated about 8 miles from the city, and

Howard A. Stahl, the owner of the property and a member of the public links section of the United States Golf Association, is chairman of the local committee and is planning to give the contestants a most enjoyable time.

Free transportation between the Hotel Hollenden and the golf course has been provided, and a stag dinner will be one of the features of the entertainment. There will be innumerable prizes, while competition for the contestants who fail to qualify will give them an opportunity to play golf even if they are out of the national event.

Among the visitors in Washington last week was Charles D. Hunter, of Tacoma, Wash., better known as "Chuck" Hunter, who was one of the qualifiers in the intercollegiate championship. He was the guest of Roland Mackenzie, with whom he played on the Burning Tree, Chevy Chase and Columbia courses. In his first round on the Columbia course he negotiated the eighteen holes in 74 strokes, only 4 over par, and had similar low scores on the other courses.

An interesting mixed foursome, best ball, eighteen holes, was played on the course of the Chevy Chase Club last week, with nearly twenty entrants.

The winners were Mrs. T. C. Kincaid, who has returned to the city and is again playing golf, and George Wadsworth, with a best ball of 83, the runners-up being Mrs. Emery Smith and her father, Gen. H. P. McCain, whose card totaled

A junior amateur-professional match will be played on the course of Rolling Road Club, near Baltimore, tomorrow. The competition will be 18 holes, best ball, and will be open to all amateurs under 21 years of age.

"I read with much interest," said Louis A. Spiess, of the Indan Spring Club last week, "the comment in the golf column of The Post relative to tournament players who qualify in the fifth and sixth sixteens when they properly belong in the first or second. It is certainly discouraging to an 18-handicap player who qualifies in one of the lower sixteens with the best game of which he is capable, to find himself opposed to a golfer whose handicap is only 10 or 12. He is beaten from the start. I do not know what can be done to correct this situation, but any club which can devise a system whereby all the qualifiers are on an equal basis will make itself popular."

The next golf outing of the Kiwanis Club will be held on the Manor course Wedendsay, with the pladen only with the plates of volcids in the afternoon.

The deadliest club in George J. Voigt's golf bag is a spade mashie. It is old and more or less rusty, but in Voigt's hands it can be relied upon to land the ball on the green near the pin from any distance up to 150 yards. He plays the club with a certain feeling that it will not fail him, and when he takes it out of the basolute certainty.

Every golfer knows that he possesses families only 10 or 12. He is beaten from the start. I do not know what can be done to correct this situation, but any club which can devise a system whereby all the qualifiers are on an equal basis will make itself popular." an equal basis will make itself popu In this connection it is recalled

In this connection it is recalled that in one of the local spring tournaments two players qualified in the fifth sixteen. It was predicted from the start that they would be winners and, sure enough, both came through to the final round and captured the winner and runner-up prizes.

Country Club, Los Angeres, was out playing with one of his fellow members to whom he had given a handicap of a stroke a hole.

Coming to the fourth hole, the member helped himself, to his endless joy.

"Walker," said Byrne to the club professional when he returned to the caddy house, "I know the penalty for a lost ball, but what is the penalty for a lost caddy?"

"Two strokes in medal play and the loss of the hole in match play," replied Walker, without a smile. Incidentally, the lost ball was never found.

89. Guy V. Norwood won a hand-some pair of golf stockings by choosing the lucky number in the knickers' handicap.

The Bannockburn golfers are justiy proud of their new eleventh hole. The tee is situated at the summit of a steep declivity—so steep, in fact, that skids are almost necessary in descending to the green, 162 yards below the tee. A stream has been diverted so as to make a hazard in front of the green, so that an accurate shot is required. To play a mashle from a tee which is a sensation afforded by no other short hole on any District course.

Pitching into the cup for eagles and birdles has now become an everyday affair at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Last week when Denise Barkalow and Dave Thomson, the club professional, were playing in a fourball match against P. W Calfee and Walter Cunningham, assistant professional at Burning Tree, Thomson drove a distance of over 300 yards to the sixteenth green, leaving him an 8-foot putt for an eagle 2.

Cunningham, who had almost driven the green, chipped his mashie shot into the oup for a 2, whereupon Thomson missed his putt.

On the seventh hole of the Washington course, when Frank Roesch and Henry D. Nicholson were playing together, Roesch chipped his ball into the cup for a birdie 3 after an overapproach of several yeards beyond the green. Did Nicholson lose the hole? Not at all. He ran down a putt for another birdie 3 from the edge of the green.

Tommy Armour, the national golf champion, was the recipient at the Congressional Country Club last week of a large autographed photograph from Secretary Herbert Hoover, which he has added to the many treasures he has received since he won the title.

The monthly event of the Women's District Golf Association will be played tomorrow on the Town and Country Club course. Competition will be a qualifying round, followed by a miniature tournament.

Playing the first nine of the Indian Spring course last week, J. V. Brownell scored a succession of 5s for the first five holes. Then he began to perform miracles, getting a birdie 2 on the sixth, a birdie 4 on the seventh, a birdie 3 on the eighth and a birdie 2 on the ninth, finishing the nine in 36, one stroke over par. It is said that this is the first time any amateur has captured four consecutive birdies on the course.

in the fifth sixteen. It was predicted from the start that they would be winners and, sure enough, both came through to the final round and captured the winner and runner-up prizes.

In the tombstone tournament at the Bannockburn Club last week one of the competitors, Fred Byrne, hooked his ball into the forest on the left of the tenth fairway. Presently, while looking for the ball, he discovered that he had also lost his caddy.

"Where are you, caddy? Where are you?" he shouted.

"Here I am," answered a distant After wandering through the woods for several minutes the player and the caddy finally came together. It was like Stanley meeting Livingstone in the ready house, "I know the professional when he returned to the caddy house, "I know the professional when he returned to the caddy house, "I know the professional when he returned to the caddy house, "I know the professional when he returned to course.

Dewey Zirkin, of the City Club, playing on the nine-hole Beaver Dam course last week, scored two birride 4s on the hird hole under unusual conditions. ## BALLSTON-ST. JOE GAME IS UNLIMITED FEATURE

Five Battles Scheduled For Day

Hess Meets Hartford; N. E. Motorists and Stephens Clash.

CAPITAL CITY unlimited teams in the first divisions of the two sections were given something to think and ponder over last Sunday, when the Stephens A. C., swamped in three straight games, came back to hand the Hartford team a drubbing which sent it skidding off the top perch in the east section.

With that history deeply impressed on their minds, the teams lower in the standing will be out today to create other upsets. At least, the prospect is that every club in action today is in for a tough battle.

A glance over the schedule for today reveals two games which should draw a little more interest than the others. In the west section, Ballston will risk its winning streak on its home field in a game with the crack St. Joseph Club. A victory for the Northeast sandiotters would help the race a lot at this time.

In the east section the Hess-

In the east section the Hess-Hartford clash at the Washington Barracks seems to have an edge on game, although Stephen's upset of the Hartfords last Sunday may be repeated at the expense of the Motorists, who are now in first place with three consecutive victories.

The two other west section games should be interesting enough. Both are important to the teams involved. The Realtors, after a lay-off, will swing into action again, meeting the Fort Myer team on the Soldiers' diamond, while the Addison Club will entertain the Donohues in the Georgetown Hollow. Manager "Pop" Wood. of Ballston, has announced that he will use King or Sebastian against St. Joe. Both pitchers are at top form.

Manager Ingram, of Addison, has Blackle Robinson and Southwell Brown ready to shoot at the Dono-hues, who can counter with Joe McCarthy and Boby Lyons. The atter is the most probable starter Gillie Ottenberg's return to the form he showed last year has given the Rialtos pennant hopes. In independent games recently, Ottenberg has been setting a fast pace. Manager Nate Sauber will also have Bennie Sauber and Sam Simons to shoot at the Fort Myer team; which will probably depend on Hammond, a creditable performer.

ociock, with the Yorkes and Tremones crossing bats on the East Ellipse at the same hour. The Takoma Tigers and Kanawhas are forced to idle on account of a mix-up of schedule.

The Sport Mart-Keane game will be watched with interest due to the fact that the former club has taken a new lease on life and apparently shaken the that the former club has taken a new lease on life and apparently shaken the jinx that followed it through the first half of the series.

This regain of stride will no doubt make trouble for the Keanes, because Mangaer Noyes expects to use his hurling ace, Dezendorf, who has rounded into form at last.

Dezendorf, in his last performance, pitched excellent ball against the Takoma Tigers, upsetting all the dope and bringing his team within striking distance of fourth place.

The Keanes, on the other hand, will be ready for any onrush because Joe Freschi, their star pitcher, will be on the mound. All in all a closely contested game is predicted.

The Tremont-Yorke game will be just as interesting, because if the last year's champions win and the Keanes lose a tie for firdst place will result.

It's "Doe" Baker's turn on the mound for the Tremonts, but Man-ager Pete Clango might switch to "Tack" Ensor, star left-hander. who quieted the ever-dangerous Takoma Tigers last Sunday.

Manager Clango is confident that either Baker or Ensor can stop the Yorkes, and he has both ready. The Yorkes expect to put up a good fight, however, because Pop Jewett has his son, Lewis Jewett, ready to swing against the Tremonts.

Terminal Morning League Rejuvenates Veteran Stars

Jersey Yards Leads in Recreational Circuit; "Old Men" Fooling Batters and Stealing Bases; Lefty White Star Again.

By ORREL MITC; ELL.

A FTER a lapse of several years, the Morning Railroad Y. M. C. A. League has been reorganized and is now operating with four clubs, namely Jersey Yards, Capital Traction Railway, American Express Tigers and the Railway Mail Service.

At present, Jersey Yards, the Tigers and Capital Traction teams are in the thick of the fight for first section honors. Railway Mail Service, now hopelessly out of the first series race, are preparing for a title drive in the following series. By ORREL MITCI ELL.

The league has been the rejuvenation of many players, who in their younger days were highly rated for their baseball ability among the leading amateur and semipro players.

Does any one remember Howard "Lefty") White, who pitched for the alexandria Dreadnaughts and the Alexandria Dreadnaughts and the Shamrocks some eight or ten years ago? Howard twirls for the Capital Traction nine in the "Y" circuit and, while he may lack some of the speed and "break" on his curve that he had in his prime, he has lost none of his cunning.

In a recent game with the Railway Mail Service team "Lefty" fooled the Service team both at the home plate and at first base. He struck out twelve and caught six men off base with his puzzling motion, leaving the burden of making the other three put-outs to his support.

Johnny Balsinger, who has had experience in the professional ranks, takes keen pleasure in fooling the batters with his wide-sweeping curves.

This is generally the case when Bal-singer is in the mood to pitch; other-wise the pleasure belongs strictly to the batters in slamming his offerings the batters in slamming his offerings over the lot.

The veteran Bill Smith, playing centerfield for the Tigers, showed he can still "go and get 'em" in the outfield as well as hit with the old-time vim. Joseph Hunt, whose name has been in the line-ups of the Capital Traction teams for the last ten years, cavorts around second base with plenty of pep.

Shaw went to the bat four times, got three hits, including a double, scored four runs, and pulled down a pair of sensational catches in left field. Not so bad!

At Eastport, Hampden and Eastport, holding down first and last places, respectively, of the league, will meet in the other game.

Much interest centers in the game at the American League Park. Bitter rivalry between the Shamrocks and the Georgetown A. C., formerly known as the Knickerbockers, has existed for five years or more. THE Emery Nine gained undisputed possession of first place in the Atlas Midget League yesterday by defeating the Eddie Foster Team, 22 to 7, while the Lyon Village Nine was absorbing a 19-to-6 beating at the hands of the Northerns. The Stauntons broke into the win column by virtue of a forfeit by the Hornets, but bowed to the Harlems, 5 to 1, in a well-played game. The Hartfords were idle.

The Emerys collected 21 hits off the slants of the Eddie Foster pitchers, A. Fitzgerald and Cornell leading the assault with four hits apiece. Carter

The two teams have met frequently prior to entering the newly organized Intercity League this year, and the Georgetown Hollow has been the scene of many a stirring battle.

The match went to four sets, King and Mitchell winning, 6-4, 6-3, 2-6, 6-3. The players were presented with handsome gifts after the match for their brilliant play in the tournament. The opening set proved the most sgruelling contest of the afternoon. In six of the ten games the score was carried to ducee, and four of those eventually resulted in wins for the King-Mitchell pair.

The latter pair, however, was forced to the limit to win the set. With the score 40 to love in favor of Charest and Considine, the Montrose Park boys flashed some great tennis to take the mext five points and game in rapid order. Among the Baltimoreans in the first sixteen, Grimes had the best chance. He and Baldwin staged a pretty contest that was marked by creditable golf up to the extra hole.

Grimes had gone out in 41 to keep within easy striking distance and then launched a second nine offensive that was to bring him up on even terms and enable him to reach the end of the regular 18-hole route all square with his man. On that second nine Grimes had a 37, only one over par.

But when they went to the first tee to play the nineteenth hole the young Rolling Road player blew up.

When Shorey and Young McPhall mounted the first tee to start their second-round argument it was raining. Shorey, whose qualification score of 74 had won him the medal with some to spare, had pleaded weariness and persuaded the committee to permit him a rest of several hours after his first-round fracas. It was a few minutes after 4 p. m. when he and McPhall finally set out. While Shorey never gave the Baltimore lad much that could have been considered encouraging. McPhall held on well and refused to give up the ship until he carried Shorey to the fifteenth green. "I believe such a procedure would constitute a far more valuable and accurate test of Dempsey's condition than any examination by a physician which might show him to be in perfect health, but that would not necessarily mean he is qualified to fight. I know many men of Dempsey's age who are in perfect health, but that does not mean they could stand up for 30 seconds before even a third rate heavy-weight."

Y' SWIMMERS IN DISTANCE MEET

Events to Be Staged at Intervals Starting July 15.

A N endurance swimming meet competition to beat the quarter-mile, half-mile and mile distances will be conducted from July 15 to August 31 by the Young Men's Christian Association.

Rules governing the swim were announced yesterday by E. F. Martyn, Y. M. C. A. swimming director.

Entrants in each class must swim a minimum distance, as follows 100 yards in the quarter-mile class; 33 lengths of the pool in the half-mile class, and 66 lengths in the 1-mile class.

Those in the quarter-mile divi-sion may not swim more than half a mile at a time; those in the half-mile class are restricted to a mile distance at a time, but contestants in the mile class may swim any in the mile class may swim any distance above the mile.

The average distance, figured by dividing the number of lengths swum by the number of trips to the pool during the period of the meet, will determine the winners of the various classes.

Hans Manzenreider, Don Carpenter, A. Aben, L. Lindberg and Jerome Shear are among the prominent local swimmers who have entered in the endurance swim.

RING PARTNER JOLTED BY SHARKEY

Arouses Ire of Foe of Dempsey and Is Hit Hard.

NEW YORK, July 9 (A.P.).—Jack Sharkey waded through six spar-ring partners in his training for Dempsey here today and unleashed the lightning in his punch for a scant half second in the half dozen rounds

An unknown heavyweight named Marcus Polo aroused the Lithuanian ire by clubbing him with the back of his wrist bone as they came out of a clinch

"Watch that backhand," warne Sharkey.

Sharkey.

A moment later the sparring partner landed the same foul blow.

"Oh-ho, so it's getting to be a habit," Sharkey growled, eyes narrowing, and he jarred the swarthy Pole to the heels with a pile-driving left and right.

Except for that moment Sharkey was the 1', bronzed good-natured boy, looking the part of a handsome fullback of some college football team, in the leather helmet he wore in the ring.

"Ladies and gentlemen." Sharkey announced with a grin as he fin-ished his six rounds and beckomed a gray-heared battle-scarred veter-an into the ring, "I want to intro-duce to value my samesske not

The old-time heavyweight who nar-The old-time heavyweight who narrowly missed a championship himself in the days of Jeffries and Fitzsimmons took a bow and later confided that "the boy" looked good to him and that he was proud to have him wearing the name of Sharkey. the old sailor when he was a gob in the Navy learning to box.

Sharkey's second day of training here began at 7 o'clock in the morning when he jogged his 4 miles in Central Park with Mrs. Sharkey accompanying him at the wheel of Jack's big car.

Eager for action, Sharrey was in the ring atop Madison Square Garden before the scheduled hour of 2 o'clock ready for his sparring mates after pummeling the heavy sandbag for two rounds.

BOND MARKET PRICES SHOW LITTLE CHANGE

Fall in New Issues With Much Salet Reinvestment Bolsters Better Grades.

FRENCH PAPER IS STEADY

New York, July 9 (Associated Press). Price changes in the bond market today were small and about evenly divided between advances and losses. High-grade issues held reasonably steady, with business in rather small volume. The sharp contraction in new issues this week, together with the large amount of reinvestment money available, continued to exert a sustaining influence in the better grades, while week-end profit taking took fractional tell from various semispeculative issues.

tional toll from various semispeculative issues.

Buying of French issues again was a feature of the day's trading. The 7s changed hands to the extent of more than $200,000, and the price held steady. These londs have been gaining steadily in the last week or so and now are only a fraction below their high record price of 105¼. A few French corporation liens also displayed firm tendencies, and Hungarian Municipal 7½s received good support.

Accumulation of domestic railway bonds of the gilt-edged order continued in a quiet manner. Chesapeake Corporation 5s, Union Facific 4½s, Lake Shore 4s and a few others attracted buyers at practically unchanged prices. Public utility and industrial mortagues were relatively inactive and irregular. There was moderate buying of Market Street Railway 7s and some liquidation of International Telephone convertible 5½s. United States Government obligations were easy, with only a handful of transactions.

Liggett & Myers Tobacco

Company

The Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., which long ranked third in the tobacco industry as regards earnings, now occupies second place in the production of cigarettes. Its best known trade names are Chestrefield, Fatima and Piedmont. The company's activities include the production of all kinds of tobacco products excepting snuff and large cigars.

Earnings have been steadily expanding since 1919 and in 1926 were the largest in the company's history. Net income last year amounted to $17.636. 000, this figure being equal to $6.76 per share of common stock as compared with $6.35 carned in 1925 Earnings at all times have borne a fairly consistent relation to the amount of active working capital except just after the war. At the end of 1926, the company was in the strongest position since its incorporation with ... net working capital of more than $104.000,000.

Stock outstanding consists of common "B" shares and a 7 per cent cumulative preferred issue. The "B" stock is nonvoting but ranks with the common in the distribution of dividends. ## Oldest District Mail Carrier To Quit Service In August Brentwood, Md., Man Will Round Out 46 Years As Postman Next Month, Retiring at Age of 65. Is Robust and Vigorous.

Veteran Once Steward at White House; Witness to Murder of Garfield and Testified at Trial of Charles J. Guiteau.

The oldest of local mail carriers in point of service will retire next month when William S. Crawford, of Brentwood, Md., walks into the Woodridge branch station from last delivery, and lays down his empty pouch, never to work it up again. pick it up again.

The veteran carrier has been distributing mail in various sections of Washington for nearly half a century. He began at the age of 19. He will reach the retirement age of 65 years on September 9. However, he expects to obtain 15 days leave, and so will retire in August, after having rounded out 46 years of service.

Mr. Crawford, then a mere youth, Mr. Crawford, then a mere youth, took Garfield's two traveling cases to the old Sixth street depot on the day of the assassination. He reached the station just ahead of the President. He was one of the star witnesses for the prosecution in the trial that resulted in the hanging of Charles J. Guiteau, the assassin.

Saw Garfield Shot,

He saw Garfield accompanied by James G. Blaine, alight from the carriage, then went into the check room to check the traveling cases, and had no sooner put the cases down than he heard a pistol shot.

He rushed to the door, and there, between the benches in the station, saw Garfield reeling, and the assassin take deliberate aim and fire the second shot.

WILLIAM S. CRAWFORD.

At the time of his admission to the White House personnel he was a lad of 15 years. He had a full mustache, he said, at the age of 14.

Born in Virginia.

He was transferred from Dupont Circle to the Woodridge section a quarter of a century ago, and has been there ever since. For the first five years he delivered mail on horseback. He was the first carrier in the section.

Later he obtained a mail delivery wagon, and for many years, delivered the mail by this method. He gave the horse and wagon up in the latter part of 1925, which marked the passing of the horse from the Washington postal service.

A policeman met the assassin at the door and told him that no one would be permitted to leave the station. According to Mr. Crawford, Guiteau answered "I am the man. Take me to the station." One of the women employes at the station rushed to Garfield, lifted him up and placed his head in her lap.

He describes going for the traveling cases, returning, and in the complete surprise that possessed him, leaning over the bench and gazing at Garfield. Then he elbowed his way through the crowd, placed the cases in the wagon and went back to the White House.

Seeks "Lifetime Job."

Garfield was shot July 2, and lingered until September 19, when he died. At the announcement of his death, Mr. Crawford decided to look for another position. The postal service was recommended to him as "a lifetime job."

He entered the service of the White House in 1877 at the beginning of the Bayes administration. The job of assistant steward had just been vacated by an older brother, and he applied for and obtained it. His chief task was to go to the various markets and stores for produce. #### COMING EVENTS IN MEXICO.

Ambassador Sheffield's resignation has been finally accepted by the President, to take effect upon the appointment of well known for many months that Mr. Sheffield wished to retire. His duties in the City of Mexico have been both onerous and vexing, with no hope of a successful outcome so long as the differences between the two governments were dealt with by the usual diplomatic methods. The mendacity and unreliability of the Mexican officials long ago disgusted Ambassador Sheffield. He was in favor of adopting drastic means to compel the Calles government to respect American rights. The Government at Washington ruled otherwise.

No doubt Mr. Sheffield's withdrawal will encourage the Calles government to persist in its stealthy attempt to confiscate American property, and it may become so bold as to force the United States to act. But thus far no actual confiscation has taken place under the laws that became effective last January, although an American oil company has been notified that it has "renounced" its title through failure to apply for a 50-year concession. The Calles government has obstructed the American companies that failed to apply for concessions before January 1, and has favored companies that did yield their titles. The obdurate concerns have found that they could not obtain drilling permits, while the concerns that complied with Mexican demands had no difficulty in obtaining permits. The Calles government, however, has taken care not to interfere with the extraction of oil from wells already drilled, as the tax upon this product is one of the principal sources of revenue. velopment, is only one of the items that point to the collapse of the Calles regime. Customs revenues have fallen off also to such an extent that the Mexican government is hard pressed for money with which to pay the army.

Unless actual confiscation of American property should occur, it seems probable that the United States will continue its policy of silence, pending a change of government in Mexico. This change must take place next year, but the popular opposition to the Calles regime and the rivalry of presidential candidates may precipitate a crisis before Calles' term expires. Control of the army is the objective of all candidates. If Gen. Gomez or Francisco Serrano appear to be gaining the upper hand it is probable that Calles will turn the army over to Gen. Obregon. Whether Obregon would then oust Calles or permit him to serve out his term might depend upon Obregon's plans for obtaining recognition from the United States. If he should resort to a coup d'etat, the United States could withhold recognition, and it would do so if it followed the precedent established in the case of Gen. Emiliano Chamorro, of Nicaragua. Gen. Obregon knows that recognition by the United States is indispensable to the holding of power in Mexico. Therefore he will probably make every effort to clothe his accession to power with an appearance of regularity. Every one knows, however, that he is as obnoxious to the Catholics of Mexico as Calles himself, and that in an honest election he would be

Events in Mexico may take such a turn as to make it unnecessary for the United States to take the drastic steps advocated by Ambassador Sheffield. The people of Mexico may give unmistakable proof of able creatures. In each instance they in-will should be thwarted by violence there is no reason why the United States should recognize the usurper.

THE GENEVA CONFERENCE.

The increasing asperity of the discussions at Geneva confirms the fact that fundamental differences exist between Great Britain and the United States which make it impossible to establish a satisfactory ratio of naval strength.

The object of the naval conference was stated by President Coolidge to be "an agreement further limiting naval armament." This agreement is sought because "the American Government and people are convinced that competitive armaments constitute one of the most dangerous contributing causes of international suspicion and discord and are calculated eventually to lead to war."

If the Geneva conference should end without an agreement and if the American people should be convinced that Great Britain is bent upon building and maintaining a navy stronger than that of the United States, it is inevitable that 'suspicion and discord" will develop, with ultimate danger of war.

The aim of the United States is not to curtail the British navy or to deprive the British government of adequate means of defense. British needs in the shape Mr. Sheffield's successor. It has been of cruisers must be determined by Great Britain. What the United States seeks is an agreement that will limit the size and strength of navies, whatever the size and strength may be. The limitation having been agreed upon, the navies are not to be increased in the future; and thus there will be a halt to competitive

This reasonable and practicable plan for removing "one of the most dangerous contributing causes of international suspicion and discord" has met with determined opposition on the part of the British delegates at Geneva. Ambassador Gibson has utterly failed to obtain from the British delegates a statement showing what the limitations of the British navy should be. The point has been dodged again and again, and the discussions have been diverted into the irrelevant question of size and gun power of cruisers. Britain suggests that smaller vessels would be cheaper, but ignores the question of total tonnage.

Mr. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty, chief spokesman of the British delegation, approves of the criterion suggested by M. Leygues, of France, which is that each nation shall be allowed a navy in proportion to the place it has occupied for centuries. In other words, Great Britain having been mistress of the seas for centuries, she is entitled to have a navy correspondingly stronger than others. This persistent determination to retain supremacy on the sea is voiced throughout Great Britain and is undoubtedly the mainspring of action at Geneva. Mr. Bridgeman's reluctant and The shrinkage of this revenue, following | belated statement that the British govinterference with operations and new de- ernment had no idea of disputing the formula of parity of naval strength with America is made nonsense by the actions of the British delegates at Geneva.

A great fact stands in the way of Britain's desire to retain supremacy of the seas. This fact is the United States. It is stronger and richer than Britain, and will not tolerate a condition of inferiority. It does not wish to build a navy stronger than the British fleet. It scrapped battleships that would have made the American fleet stronger than the British fleet. It now asks Britain to fix a reasonable limit of naval strength. so that neither Americans nor Britons will be disturbed by competitive naval Hard as it may be for Britain to face the truth and reluctant as she is to share dominion of the sea, it may be assumed that her government will endeavor to reach an agreement. The consequences of a disagreement are too full of evil portent to be faced. A break-up at Geneva would be the signal for an abrupt change in the relations between the United States and Great Britain. The United States would proceed to build the strongest navy that the world has ever known. This Nation would take its proper place as the first naval power and would maintain it. Thus the danger of competitive naval building would be removed, but at terrible cost to Britain in national humiliation and loss of prestige.

BLUEBEARD.

The attraction that a bogus nobleman and noted swindler, now on trial in New York, still exercises over women is a mystery which women will have to explain. Police records go to prove that the philanderings of the accused man involve him with more than 40 impression-

their choice for the presidency. If their | trusted him first with their hearts and then their fortunes. He discarded the one and disappeared with the other.

The man was not without principle, according to his own light. He acknowledges, with a considerable degree of pride, that he never hesitated in going through the wedding ceremony if that was what his particular beloved desired. If she was gullible enough to intrust her money and jewels to him while only betrothed to him, so much the better. The presumption would be that such a man would have the scorn of all and the sympathy of not a single woman. The loss of their possessions they might be able to forgive eventually, but never his betrayal of their affections.

This line of reasoning does not hold good. The man's fatal fascination clings to him still. Even from the dock, about which his misdeeds confront him, he exercises a spell that brings one of those who knew him in happier days to his aid. She acknowledges that such are his charms that she might have married him. She announces that it is her intention to extend financial aid for his defense. If it is true that men and women are mastered by the forces of their subconscious selves. here must be an example of a Bluebeard complex indeed.

JOHN DREW.

The dean of the American stage as well as America's most distinguished stage family is dead. John Drew, born to the theater, died in it as he would have wished. He was on tour when he was stricken by the illness that resulted in his death. Until almost the last hour he was a vital part of the profession which he had done so much to honor during his career of more than 50 years.

There is not room to enumerate the accomplishments of John Drew as an actor. Enough here to say that every part he played added to his own distinction and that of the drama. He delighted theatergoers of two generations with the character of his performances, and never once lent a hand to those who sought to lower or degrade his chosen field. Such was the measure of his success that he gave added tone to the parts in which he appeared. He will live in the history of the theater. Those who wish for its renaissance would do well to take his conduct and taste as their

PERSONALITY.

The annual dinner of the Rhodes trustees, recently held at Oxford, was made brilliant by the distinguished company assembled and by the fine quality of the addresses delivered. Among the latter, that of Lord Byng of Vimy, proposing the toast of "the Rhodes scholars," easily took premier rank.

His text was personality. Taking the position that in these days it is not easy to be of good courage because of a dearth of leaders in nearly all parts of the world, he defined a leader as one who possessed idealism, magnetism, and the power to command. The typical leaders he selected were Cromwell, Washington, Napoleon, Lincoln and, he added, "perhaps, Mussolini." Of them he said that each was brought to the front by democracy, but that, once they had attained their place, each became the finest full-blooded autocrat possible to be seen. However, it may be with the rest, Americans will never admit the truth of that statement so far as Washington or Lincoln is concerned; but its truth or falsity does not affect Lord Byng's argument. His whole point was that each of them had personality, a quality which nobody has ever been able probably to define, although it is the biggest reality ever conceived. It can not be dissected; it can not be analyzed or reduced to its elements.

The opposite to the men with personality are, in Lord Byng's view, stereotypes. He explained that the man of personality would read a book, think over its idea, utilize it, and then form his own ideas of what he had read. Shakespeare would be a good example of this class, although Lord Byng did not say so. The stereotypes, on the other hand, take the book, word by word, sponge it up into their complexes, and then act to the very letter of it. Stereotypes, he asserted are peculiarly liable to be found in the army and among schoolmasters. Every one of experience knows how true is that indict-

'The conclusion of Lord Byng's speech was an earnest appeal to every Rhodes scholar to keep his personality and go forth from the groves of Academe into the wider arena of life, not as a stereotype, but as a man with ideals of leadership and the power to get other people to

tations, and not all of them possess the qualities of leadership. Some of them, however, do possess these qualities, and it is part of wisdom to encourage those so endowed to develop their gifts. It is good for them and it is good for the world at large. The wonder is that institutions of the higher learning insist so earnestly and so perseveringly on producing scholars rather than leaders. Character is greater than learning and personality often transcends both. It will be well not only for Oxford but also for universities everywhere to take Lord Byng's pronouncement to heart, get a new orientation on their functions, and give serious thought to the development of personality and those powers of leadership, for the lack of which humanity is in this age suffering as it has scarcely ever suf-

ITALY'S LABOR COURT.

Some time ago Premier Mussolini announced his intention to establish special courts to settle all disputes arising between capital and labor. Last week the first of these tribunals held its inaugural sitting. The case in question concerned wages paid by the confederation of agriculturists to members of the Federation of rice cleaners. Wages were fixed by a contract dated last March, and began to be applied in June. Not long thereafter the agriculturists attempted to force the workers to accept salary reductions, which they refused, appealing to the labor court. They argued that their wages were as low as any in agriculture and that they could not accept any reduction. The agriculturists maintained that the revaluation of the lira made it impossible to maintain the present wage level. After making several attempts to effect a conciliation, all of which were rejected, the presiding magistrate appointed two experts to investigate the difficulties and report to the court at a later date, when the hearings will be resumed. The Italian labor court smacks somewhat of the arbitration agreements contained in many American labor contracts, save that it adds the power of the state to that of mutual agreement. Mussolini has added no new note in industrial management by inferring that strikes and lockouts are costly matters, and that every effort should be made to prevent them without interfering with the wheels of production. It is rather unusual, however, to have the state itself sit as supreme authority in labor dis-

The American Federation of Labor surely does not look with favor upon the labor court. While it recognizes the wisdom of arbitration agreements, and would not accept such an institution. Business, so long as it is lawful and conducted in accord with the law, looks upon itself as being separate from government, and it would not permit the latter to inject itself into the purely private matter of labor or wage differ-Mussolini, however, does not care what labor or capital may think. His philosophy contemplates the state as above all. Capital, labor, the individual, all are subservient to the state, all may exist only to serve the state. To America, his is a radical doctrine, one which, however, is well worth watching. The labor court may function well in Italy, which apparently has accepted other innovations far more consequential.

THE MOTION-PICTURE MONOPOLY.

The Federal Trade Commission has subjected itself to much criticism through its alleged interference in the conduct of various lines of business, but in deciding that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation violates the antitrust laws, and in ordering that organization to cease and desist from the practices which have brought so much discredit and criticism upon the moving-picture industry, the commission has performed a public service that can not be otherwise than satisfactory to owners and patrons

The order prohibits the corporation and the individual defendants from continuing the combination "to lessen competition and restrain trade in interstate and foreign commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motionpicture films; from the practice of blockbooking, i. e., leasing films in a block or group and compelling the picture house which shows the films to take all pictures in the group or block, or none at all, without regard to the character of the pictures or the wishes of the picture house; and from acquiring or threatening to acquire theaters for the purpose of intimidating or coercing an exhibitor of films to book and exhibit films of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

The commission in its findings shows to what an extent the respondents control the moving-picture industry. On June 30, 1926, it is shown that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had an interest in no less than 368 theaters. of which in 128 they owned 100 per cent, in 13 theaters more than 50 per cent, in 128 theater 50 per cent, and in 99 such establishments less than 50 per cent.

necessary effect of such distribution policy is to lessen competition and to tend to create a monopoly in the motion-picture industry, tending to exclude from the market and the industry small independent producers and distributors of films, and denying to exhibitors freedom of choice in leasing films.

RADIO AND NAVIGATION.

Perhaps one of the most important uses for the radio is that which is to be used by the maritime nations of the world for the purpose of improving their time observations.

Longitude and latitude are the two divisions of the earth and the oceans upon which all navigation is based. Latitude can readily be worked out by the navigator because there is no difference in distance between degrees. From the Equator to the North Pole there are exactly 90 degrees, and each parallel is separated 60 miles from the next higher or lower, as the case may be, so that a navigator who is 10 degrees north of the Equator knows that he is exactly 600 miles toward the pole from that imaginary line. Longitudinal degrees, on the other hand, are 60 miles apart at the Equator, which distance gradually diminishes as the poles are approached. until all of the 360 degrees meet there. Longitude is based upon the time as shown at the observatory at Greenwich, England, and all chronometers are set at Greenwich time as the base of all longitudinal reckoning.

The longitudinal difference between two points is the difference in the local sidereal times of those two points. Therefore, the very best method of determining the longitude of a ship at sea. for instance, is to note the difference of time at exactly the same instant, and this is what it is hoped to accomplish through the radio. In the old days of the sailing vessel, when the only means of communication between two craft at sea was by flags of the international code, the skipper of one such ship upon sighting another invariably flew up the signals which asked the question, "What is your longitude?" Today, with the radio, he has only to ask, "What time is it by your chronometer?" and upon receipt of the reply to that question he can work out his own location. The radio may yet take the place of the sextant and the quadrant in the chartroom of the vessel of the future.

of the faithful women of that town to its former beauty and dignity as a quaint colonial home. These Saturday teas at Kenmore are quite the most popular events of the week for miles around Frederickburg and many Washingtonians have cultivated the habit of motoring there to attend them.

The ladies of the Kenmore Association are hostesses for the teas, and the charm of a summer afternoon on the historic estate is most appealing. THE younger married set is greatly I pleased with the report that Mr. and Mrs. David Estes Bruce, son-in-law and daughter of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, will spend next season in Washington. Mr. Bruce, who has been American Vice Consul at Rome, has resigned from that post because of the ill health of Mrs. Bruce, who has not been well since she left her native

As Miss Ailsa Mellon Mrs. Bruce was one of the most fascinating and interesting of debutantes and has a wide circle of friends here, all of which will rejoice at her return to Washington. Just now the Bruces are on a yachting cruise with Secretary Mellon in the Mediterranean.

Even in midsummer the wedding bells merrily ring out and Washington is entertained with reports of marriages of those connected in some way with the Capital which have occurred or are to be in the near future who are now in other cities. The engagement of Mrs. Etelka Sartees Bell, widow of Mr. Edward Bell, of New York, formerly American Charge d'Affaires in Peking, interests many friends here, and at the wedding ceremony in London of Miss Matilda Houghton, daughter of the American Ambassador to Great Britain, and Mrs. Alanson B. Houghton, to Mr. Chandler P. Anderson, ir., well known here through his previous connection with the Department of State, many Washingtonians were present.

The Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Curtis D. Wilbur, who are spending July in Washington, have found much pleasure and given much to their friends in down-the-Potomac cruises in the U.S. Sylph, a Government yacht set aside for the use of the Secretary of the Navy. Last week-end they took a party of friends on a cruise which lasted for several days.

THE lure of the "Ole Swimmin' Hole" of song and story is rivaled by the lure of the ultra modern swimming pool growing in number and luxury about Washington, both at country clubs and on private estates. Every evening after dinner swimming parties are in order. This is as good a way as any to while away the long summer hours for those who are staying in Washington from choice or because of official duties.

The informal dinner on one of the various roof gardens or at home followed by a "movie party," winding up for a swim at one of the pools to end the evening forms an attractive program for "night life" in Washington at this season of the year.

Some of the hostesses reverse this order and organize their swimming parties before dinner and go to the movies afterward or go to the movies, return for a dip, followed by a supper with all the guests hungry for delectable cool drinks and salads.

It is surprising how many good swimming places have been found about Washington or within easy motor distance. Picnic parties which combine swimming as one of the enjoyments are often the pastime of afteroffice hours for officials and their families. The farmers and owners of homes along the Severn, the Potomac and the Paxtuxent are reaping harvests by renting the privilege of swimming in their waters and picnicking on their lawns after bathing parties.

Those who own country estates near Washington are entertaining many week-end parties and if their places are not on the

Pueyrredon

L gayeties there on the Fourth of July in celebration of the fifty-fifth anniversary of President Coolidge's birth, and it is safe to venture the assertion that he has observed his natal day farther West than any other President in our history.

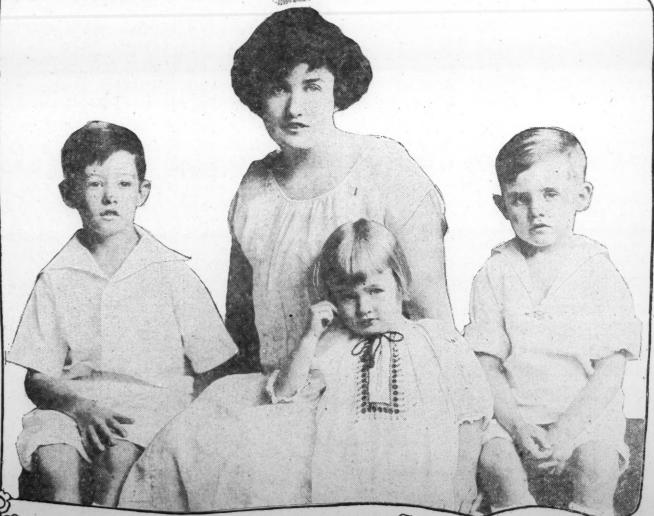

Mrs. Coolidge was the moving spirit of all the fun and planned many pleasant surprises for her distinguished husband. Telegrams and gifts are said to have poured in on him from many lands and States and the happy fisherman President of the Black Hills must have enjoyed the day, free from many of the restraints of his high office and filled to overflowing with the felicitations of his friends and admirers.

Judging from the progress being made on the White House repairs there is every indication that shortly after their return here the President and Mrs. Coolidge will be able to resume their residence at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue, spick and span in glistening white paint and with many innovations and renovations about the historic mansion.

m ROM}$  time to time there has been a plan projected to build a new White House, one more adapted in space and convenience to the needs of a Chief Executive than the present one, which dates back to the founding of the City of Washington. But these plans do not materialize into action, largely because the people of the country entertain a real affection for the present White House with its hosts of memories of the distinguished men and women who have lived within its sheltering walls. Naturally, in the course of time, there will be a new White House built, but the recent repairs will do much to postpone that day still further into the future. There is a charm and a homelike atmosphere about the American Executive Mansion hard to find in palaces pf the Old World, and that very fact should delay its abandonment for a new edifice as long as possible.

The President's house on Dupont circle has admirably served the purpose of a temporary White House. It gave the proper amount of seclusion for the President and Mrs. Coolidge and yet was splendidly adapted to such entertainment as they cared to offer during the months in which they have lived on the OMEN leaders are using their vacations at home to arouse the women of their home States to the necessity of casting their votes in the presidential elections. This summer women like men are laying their plans of campaign and one of the first steps of women's organizations and women affiliated with both the Republican and Democratic parties is to arouse the women and the men vote slackers to their civic duties.

A call to Democratic women sent out by the party women leaders con-tains the statement: "The United States of America invites you to vote in the presidential elections of 1928 as well as in the local State elections.

"If you are not already prepared to vote will you start to prepare yourself now. Remember in every State in the United States you must pay a poll tax. In other States you must declare your intention of becoming a citizen, then wait a year before you can register. This is true in Maryland. Will you be among the following who sent in their regrets? The women made the following excuses for failing to vote in the last election. Were you one of them?

I am sorry, but I forgot to register. No one reminded me it was time to register.

I am sorry, but I forgot to pay my poll tax. I did not know you had to work the properties of the properties the proof the unit and a special uniform.

Dolls Now Women's Rage.

Dolls are the rage with adults nowadays, and little girls might well sign a protest against this infringement of their vested rights. The doll fad has reached such proportions that some women even spend much time and money over the various costumes for their playthings and are having costumes to match their own gowns made for the dolls. The doll makers are doing a thriving business generally, and the clever artisans who can make dolls to resemble their owners are well on the road to wealth.

Women who do not carry dolls as a rule compromise on some kind of a stuffed pet, a pink poodle, a woolly white bear to carry with a white costume, or grimacing monkey. These toy animals are made to slip neatly over the hand and in this way they can be easily carried. Dolls Now Women's Rage.

From the capitals of the world as well as from American summer resorts comes the news of Washington women who are holding their own, sarorially speaking, as well as in other ways.

The old idea of the sport clothes for vacationing as all-sufficient for the demands of the summer season has quite disappeared and elaborate wardrobes have featured many holiday makers' outfits for pleasure journeys.

Those who visit the Old World and its noted fashion centers manage to include new costumes of various kinds in their shopping lists. So the luggage on the return voyage is apt to be even larger than that taken abroad much to the discomfort of the masculine portion of a household.

The interest in necklines and the length of the skirts for the fall is apparent even this early in the summer, and most of the women who provide for the early fall festivities while they are on their summer travels are, we are told, showing a decided impartiality over the V neckline, the square neckline and the high round neckline for daytime wear, while for evening they are partial to the wide, round and V-shaped necklines.

The skirts will remain short, it is said, except for a few instances in evening gowns that dip in the back and, so fo course, the period gowns and robes de style adopted by the younger generation and especially the debutantes. ## Widening Horizons for Realtors

An architect's sketch of a building has meaning. A photograph of he same structure has a meaning that no advance drawing could Back in 1923 there appeared in this magazine a news story of a national conference in Madison, Wis., April 20 and 21, hailed then as epochal, at which was visioned and outlined a structure which has become real estate education. The magazine is glad to give its leading position in this issue to another picture of real estate education. This time the picture is not an architectural sketch. It is accurately and objectively photographic.

Since that April meeting of four years ago there has been much talk among real estate men, much anticipation of what the new courses in real estate, where they were proposed, could mean. The tables here given are the result of a careful check by letter of exactly what has this year been done in real estate education, first under the auspices of real estate boards and second in the regular courses of universities and volleges.

The lists are documentation for all that has ever been said as to the possibilities for the business of real estate in its great movement toward substantial educational foundation.

No realtor can look unmoved at the list of colleges and universities here given, or realize, without a feeling of widening horizons, what it means to have them concern themselves with land problems. No educator, with such a list before him, can any longer consider the field of real estate one which is untried, or shallow. For the real estate board the most interesting part of the story is that of what other real estate boards are successfully doing. Only some half dozen universities or colleges at present may be said to have, either in fact or in immediate expectation, anything like a complete graduate or undergraduate course in real estate, but side by side with the institutions which are already deeply concerned with real estate problems there are in the are already deeply concerned with real estate problems there are in the this statement upon the part of the present list some 45 or 46 institutions of first character which have only justice will be helpful. begun work in land economics.

resent list some 45 or 46 institutions of first character which have only lostice will be helpful. While this case is a New York case and is particularly interesting to brokers in that State, nevertheless the princaples of the law governing the rights of the law governing the rights of ts inception been jointly developed by the educational institutions of the country and the Natonal Association of Real Estate Boards.

From the time when the first conference of national scope was called to bring together the educators of the country and representatives of he business of real estate, there has been a constant interflow of comnunication between the universities and schools and the central realtor lody. There is a promising close working relationship between real state boards and State real estate associations and the leading educational institutions undertaking a study of real estate. When real state education comes to be developed, as it may now be seen that it will be developed, that development will be purely practicable because the business of real estate, there has been a constant interflow of communication between the universities and schools and the central realtor estate education comes to be developed, as it may now be seen that it will be developed, that development will be purely practicable because estate educational movement, has one great meaning. The ovement has reached a point where its continuance is assured. Probably no temporary wave of indifference on the part of real estate boards or real estate men could mean any appreciable lessening of the momentum they have now given it. But there will be no indifference; there luct successfully a course in real estate fundamentals must see that it strong enough to go further and open to its members the vastly nore productive courses which can be given in real estate appraisal, or in real estate law, in real estate conveyancing, or in real estate finance. Any group of real estate men which have found a fundamentals course seful and practical will want to go down deeper.

It may frankly be admitted that real estate board educational courses have failed in no inconsiderable number of cases. The study of board experience which is here presented makes certain two things-first, what the weakness is which has caused failure where there has been failure. and second, the incontestable results of courses properly carried out. It may be said that in practically every case where the results of a rse organized by a real estate board have been unsatisfactory, it has been primarily in the difficulty of securing an ideal teacher.

That difficulty was inevitable in the organization of a new subject. Men who understand real estate and who at the same time understand teaching have not been found "ready made" in any large number. They must be trained for the work. The existence of advanced courses in real estate in leading universities, in itself, will insure the coming into educational leadership of men who have a wide grasp of the theory underlving land utilization.

There are being developed in colleges and universities not out of touch with practical real estate business and in technical schools young nen who are going to come into the real estate world knowing real estate by something more than rule of thumb. They will have at their command the collective experience of the past, just as the medical adviser or the legal adviser commands such a body of collective experience.

The business of real estate may depend on them as the army depends on its skeleton of coming West Point men. And the skeleton will make possible a mobilization for professional advance of a kind which business, in any form, is only beginning to see as possible.-National Real Estate Journal.

RULING BY JUSTICE IN CASE INVOLVING BROKER AND OWNER

Emphasizes Necessity of Employment as Basis for Commission Claim.

EXCERPT FROM OPINION OF JUDGE IS PRESENTED

New York Litigation Sets Forth Principles That Apply Generally.

An exceedingly interesting case which applies to the general law having reference to the relations between brokers and owners was recently decided in the municipal court of New York. Most brokers know the necessity for a con-tract of hiring, either expressed or im-plied, if a claim for commission can plied, if a claim for commission can be maintained when services have been rendered, but there are a few who do not appreciate entirely the requirements of the law in this respect.

We quote below an excerpt from the opinion in the case referred to which was rendered by Justice Spiegelberg in the case of Thoens & Flauniacher, Inc., against Morris Kosofsky. The case establishes no new principle in the law of agency but simply emphasizes the necessity for employment of the broker as a basis for the claim for commission.

First Outing Is Given By Associate Division

The first annual outing of the associate division of the Washington Real Estate Board was one of the most successful social affairs in the history of the organization. Several hundred salesmen and members of firm constituents of the board attended this outing at the Manor Club and had as their guests the president of the board, Mr. John F. Maury, and the executive committee.

This affair, which took place Thursday, started in the afternoon with a golf tournament, swimming, indoor baseball, horse-shoe pitching and tennis. The evening was concluded with a dinner and entertainment. The neeting was addressed by Representa-ive David H. Kincheloe, of Kentucky The committee in charge consisted of M. P. ## JERSEYITES' FINDING: WAR BY REALTORS

Schemes by Land Developers Result in Complaints by "Lucky" Persons.

THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS LOST IN INVESTMENTS

Plans Are Highly Misleading, but Catch the Unwary; Check Instituted.

Winning an alleged "free lot" may mean losing a lot, according to the New Jersey Real Estate Commission, and many of the cities of the State are being flooded with offers of free lots for $39.50 each or similar sums.

Despite numerous warnings sounded through the press against the "free lot" schemes practiced by certain land developers throughout the entire country, the New Jersey Real Estate Commission again finds it necessary to call attention to the activities of a number of these purveyors of "something for nothing" in this State. Although the season has hardly opened, a number of complaints have already been filled with the State commission by persons who have been taken in by these scheming operators. The names of the offending developers have been submitted to the commission, together with the method followed in disposing of the free lots, and a thorough investigation is now being made under the supervision of Chief Investigator John N. Harkins of the State department.

N. Harkins of the State department.
The so-called "free lots" are not gifts at all, but cost $39.50 each, or a similar sum, and in the majority of cases they prove to be more expensive to the "lucky person" than the actual purchase of a piece of land at the market value. The scheme is nothing more than a trap for trusting people of limited means and little experience. That the "free lot" plan is being waged with avidity is attested by the large number of complaints filed with the New Yersey commission during the past few weeks.

War on Scheme Is Begun.

The practice of advertising and disposing of alleged free lots, however, will be checked to a great extent, if not entirely eliminated, this year, as a concerted effort is to be made to accomplish this end, thus saving hundreds of New Jersey residents not only thousands of dollars annually, but also relieving them from the mental anguish which usually accompanies these investments. Many newspapers refuse to carry the advertisements of the developers, so generous use is made of the mails and personal solicitation by unlicensed canvassers who are violating the real es-

Finally the lucky one is advised that she must pay $39.50 or $49.13, which amount is said to cover the conveyancing charges of the lot, while as a matter of fact the lot in most cases may not be worth the price asked by the developer for the title and survey charges.

other schemes used to get "suckers" is the distribution of cards in or near moving picture theaters to persons who are requested to sign them without any obligation, with the result as above stated. The finding of a disc-coin on the street which entities the finder to a free lot at a nominal sum is another method employed by developers.

Regardless of the schemes used to get the signature of a person to a card for a share in the awarding of a free lot, the result is about the same, and all persons are again warned to beware of such practices. The New Jersey Real Estate Commission suggests that before affixing their signatures to a card of any kind offering land for nothing, people should consult their local banks of chambers of commerce, these will advise prospective investors, or else write to the commission, where complete details of every land development may be obtained.

DEFENSE HIGHWAY LINKS CHEVERLY WITH CAPITAL

Washington Suburban Realty Company Reports Increased Sales in Development.

STARTS PAVING PROGRAM

The official opening, July 16, of Defense Highway, which has been open for some time to traffic, means much to all sections of Prince Georges and Anne Arundel Countles, in Maryland, as this highway links the Nation's Capital and the capital of the State, and is also opening up vast stretches of country in between.

Likewise this event means much to Cheverly, because the development is but a few hundred yards removed from Defense Highway on the Landover State road.

Cheverly has already felt the stimulus of the opening of this intercapital highway, both in increased sales and greatly increased building activity. In fact, fifteen new homes are now under construction in this delightful development, while plans for a dozen more additional have been submitted by lot owners who will begin building-operations during the summer months.

Among the homes that will be erected in the near future are those being built by S. A. Melius, of Hyatsville, Md., well-known builder, who is planning to complete a number of attractive, modern homes in the very neafuture on a group of lots recently purchased in Cheverly. Four homes, colonial in design, are also being erected—in fact, are nearly completed, in the newly opened section 7 of Cheverly. These are being built by S. G. Wetmore. bugle announces the opening of this assize court.

Yet the justice's salary has been at the same figure for nearly two centuries. When it was first set in the eighteenth century at $5,000 a year, it was deemed a princely recompense, but with the decrease in the value of money and the present British income tax it is considered not so generous. Many barristers, in giving up their position at the bar to become justices, give up incomes much larger than their judical salary.

Special to The Washington Post. New York, July 10.—Will America's builders and material men believe this will occur, according to Frederick C. Hirons, New York architect.

A number of modern structures have already made lavish and effective use below, sometimes from the side, often from far away.

The designers of the new Philadelphia Museum of Art have taken advantage of this situation. The roof of the new building is to be of blue terra cotta tile, in huge square pleces, with thick edges. The edges are of a darker shade of blue, so that with each new angle from which the roof is seen, it will assume a different tint, the two shades blending together.

A vast range of possibilities is offered in the technique of color composition, architects are realizing now. The harsh lines of a building may be softened, attention may be directed to the important features of the structure, almost any effect of strength, grace, solidity, bulk or lightness may be obtained.

Built less than a year ago, announce ment was made yesterday of the sale of the apartment building, Byron Hall, 1420 Chapin street. The property was sold for M. Biron, builder, to Victoria sold for M. Biron, builder, to Victoria Sasscer, who, it is reported, will hold it for an investment. The consideration involved was said to be about $125,000. The opening of Greenway Downs, with the great amount of interest it attracted, has directed the attenion of the public upon Fairfax County as a coming residential suburb of Washington. Although Fairfax County has many fine properties susceptible to residential development, subdivision operations heretofore have been confined mostly to Arlington County because of its immediate proximity to the City of Washington, having once been a part of the original 10-mile square District of Columbia.

The nearby sections of Fairfax County, however, all are within easy driving distance of Washington, Greenway Downs being only 25 minutes by auto from the White House. It is predicted by real estate experts that the next few years will witness the founding of many fine residential developments in historic Fairfax County.

They Await Pursuit. LONDON DANCES PRAISED

London, July 9 (A.P.).—What happens when the American debutante meets the English "young eligible?"

An American debutante who writes to the London Daily Mail only under her initials solves the question by saying that it is the American girl who gets off the "high horse" first.

"Englishmen," she says, "have impressed me as being very much more indifferent than Americans. This is only natural, as they are here in the minority and consequently sought after, as we, the girls, are in America.

"I find I am giving way to the men and am getting quite used to being unimportant. It was quite hard at first, but one can get used to anything."

There is a system of chaperoning in There is a system of chaperoning in New York which does not exist in London, the debutant declares. Very few New York girls she says, are allowed to accept offers of men to see them home, but must return home with a professional chaperon or maid. Such is not the case in London.

The fair visitor deplores the American system of cutting in at dances, and prefers the English program system.

and prefers the English program system.

"There is no way of stopping anyone from dancing with you, even if you don't like him," she says, "and again, there is no way of keeping on dancing with someone you do like if someone else feels a desire to cut in. Another point in favor of the English system is that being with your partners for about a quarter of an hour gives you the opportunity of really getting to know the men you have just met."

WEST VIRGINIA HAS LEAD IN EFFICIENCY RACE FOR PENNAN

Battleship Has Won Gunnery and Stands No. 5 in Engineering.

DOBBIN IS BEST SHOT OF AUXILIARY VESSELS

R-15, Commanded by Lieut. Saunders, Captures Submarine Firing Award.

The U. S. S. West Virginia, which winner of the gunnery trophy in the battleship class for the competitive ended June 30, and which on Ma 31 stood No. 5 in engineering, probably will win the battle efficiency pennant for the year unless her engineer ing record for June is found to have well below the average, and un laking the best final merit on the award mitigate against her. The efficiency pennant is given to the ship making the best final merit on the basis of the combined gunnery and engineering records.

The U. S. S. Dobbin, commanded by Capt. Robert Henderson, and with Lieut. Comdr. Forest B. Royal as gunnery officer, is announced as winner of the gunnery trophy in the auxiliary class. The U. S. S. Black Hawk, commanded by Lieut. Comdr. Eugene M. Woodson, and with Lieut. Houston L. Manles as gunnery officer, stands No. 2. Woodson, and with Lieut. Houston L. Maples as gunnery officer, stands No. 2, with a final merit in excess of 95 per cent of that of the trophy winner. Other leading vessels in the auxiliary class stood in the following order in gunnery: 3, Whitney; 4, Holland; 5, Langley; 6, Melville; 7, Medusa; 3, Vestal; 9, Camden; 10, Pecos.

Helena Gunnery Winner.

OU. S. S. Helena, commanded by John M. Enochs, with Lieut. as T. Craven as gunnery officer, the gunnery trophy in the patrol class. Other boats of that class wins the gunnery trophy in the patrol vessel class. Other boats of that class stood in the following order in gunnery: 2. Eagle, No. 58; 3. Asheville; 4. Eagle No. 47; 5, Pampanga; 6. Eagle No. 35; 7. Sacramento.

The final gunnery merits of leading submarines have been determined, and the trophy winner is the R-15, commanded by Lieut. Frank A. Saunders. The other four at the top of the list stood in the following order: Second, R-10; third, R-19; fourth, R-6; fifth, R-7. The rating of other submarines has not been completed.

With the close of the competitive year, some estimate also can be made ar, some estimate also can be made of the winners of engineering trophies in the several classes of ships, but, of course, no awards can be conferred un-til the reports for the month of June till the reports for the month of June are received and comparatively rated. On the hasis of performances to May 31, it is probable that engineering trophies will go to the following:

Battleship, Arizona; light cruiser, Meruphis; destroyer, Decatur; gunboat, Eagle No. 35; tender, Black Hawk, and transport, Kanawha. In the submarine class there is a close race among the R-6, R-10, S-42 and S-43, which stood in that order on May 31, with such relative to the control of the control o R-6, R-10, S-42 and S-43, which stood in that order on May 31, with such rel-atively small differences of merit that the order may be rearranged by the performances during June. In the bat-tleship class, the Oklahoma and Penn-sylvania are close contenders for the greatest improvement prize in engineer-ing, and in the light cruiser class the Memphis and Marblehead are rivals for that prize.

Light May Herald Parliament's Vote

London, July 9 (By A. P.) .- A red or green light will hereafter shine in the clock tower of the House of Commons when the house is about to vote, if the petition of 320 members of parliament is granted.

It will then be possible for members to take strolls in St. James Park or to visit the neighboring political clubs while speeches are being made, without fear of losing their vote at division time. A white light now shines in the clock tower while Commons is in session, but frequently members have returned to find the light out and the night's ses-gion over.

Commons still adjourns each night with cries of members to one another, asking which way they intend to go. In the old days, when London streets were infested with thugs, members traveled to their homes in groups for self protection.

Berlin Judges Choose Queen of the Summer

Berlin, July 9 (By A. P.).—This year's choice of the German summer queen involved much careful consideration and repeated reconsideration. For hours hundreds of competing aspirants for regal honors were obliged to file again and again before the stern appraising judges in Luna Park—the Coney Island of Berlin. It was not until 10 o'clock at night that the jury had sifted the 25 most promising maldens from all this wealth of beauty in bathing costumes.

At the final public ballot the crown was accorded by a large majority to an 18-year-old German mannequin, Margret Kraemer. The regal honors conferred on her also comprised a crisp 1,000-mark bill, a large bouquet of roses and the manifest joy of being filmed on the spot innumerable times.

heart she is intelligent, charitable and lovable.

Patricia has an older sister, cold and calculating, who discards her fiance like so many other of her whims. Under pretense of establishine a Lonesome Club Patricia calls on the rejected-lover, supposedly to exchange views for forming this important institution.

The inevitable happens and Patsy further astounds her family by brightening into a veritable font of slangy epigrams, culled secretly from a book ening into a vertable fort of stangy epigrams, culled secretly from a book designed to make a "personality" out of any one. Patsy's amusing and naive methods in winning Tony for her qwn form the buttress of the play's comedy.

FARCE FILM AT COLUMBIA STARS CODY

One of the funniest films of the season, "On Ze Boulevard," a French farce as glittering and snappy as a slice of Paris itself, comes to Loew's Columbia screen today for a week's engagement. It features Lew Cody as a philandering French waiter and Renee Adoree as the girl in a very deluge of comical woes. It all begins when Lew inherits a sudden fortune and buys a fashionable wardrode. The wardrobe starts him on the road to ruin, for he decides to become a gay boulevardier. His first firstation gets him all tangled up with on the road to ruin, for he decides to become a gay boulevardier. His first flirtation gets him all tangled up with a blonde actress and he is challenged to a duel by a Jealous rival. Director Millards is said to have surpassed his previous achievements in turning out a film which has speed, action, humor and romance intermingled abundantly in equal parts. In his hands the characters have become alive, and in spite of many farcical situations into which they are plunged, retain a warm and convincing vitality.

It is an original story by F. Hugh Herbert, famous English novelist, and Florence Ryerson, American fiction writer, who recently finished "The Demi-Bride," with Lew Cody and Norma Shearer.

Joseph and his far-famed coat of many colors had nothing on Lew Cody when that versatile actor started work on his latest role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's French farce, "On Ze Boulevard," opening today at Loew's Columbia. In fact, Joseph's coat is a back number beside Lew's pajamas; the nocturnal trousers of the screen celebrity contain at least sixteen colors that Joseph never heard of and wouldn't have known had he seen them.

Cody wears a pair of pajamas, imported from Parls, and guaranteed to be the very last word in fashions for the well-dressed boulevardier when he's not dressed. It is a maze of color—a riot of color—a veritable kaleidoscope. It's a cross between an impressionistic painting of a dye work explosion and a blast furnace on a busy day.

"In Joseph's time," says Cody, "they only had a few primary colors—and perhaps Tyrian purple, the colors of a few wild berries and yellow.

TUST how far back in the history of the theater the star system goes no one knows. It antedates the Elizabethan period; but,

An producing managers.

Mob psychology, in this country, at least, demands the star. That is the way men in charge of the theater figure. They are right—and they are wrong. On all sides, even among actors and actresses, there are wrong. On all sides, even among actors and actresses, there are wrong. An action are represented by those who were not stars in their own right.

The star, at best, is a pernicitity sort of person. The term, "Up Biate," was coined to fit the case; as most atars are that way.

A PLAYWRIGHT writes a play. An actor or actress tackies it. The star, mummer of words, walks through the part to success them.—And gets all the credit for it; with a awelled head in conjunction. The manager, thiring a press agent, sees that the newspapers are privided with bushels of copy that tells of the doings and earryings-on of the star. So that a name becomes a household word—and, to bow, a drawing card, in a money way, it's all right; but rather tough on embryonic stars who must ske out some sort of living.

The press agent—some good, honest newspaper man gone wrong—devotes the better part of his days and nights thinking up things for the star to do and say; especially say. If a lady star, he lets "her public" in on a few secrets of domestic life; especially as it has to do with the culinary arts, and sewing; though the star, in truth, never a song-slide cambed a skittle in her hand, unless it was for the purpose of making a with the culinary arts, and sewing, the control of making a left had a skittle in her hand, unless it was for the purpose of making a left. It was some fiflittle over-night gin, and wouldn't know a sewing machine from a treat years ago, phonograph, or that different kinds of needles are used. For the male when Norma still stars and the delectation of the young things who make up "his public," attended high school in Brookthe press agent rattles off reams of copy in which the star's noteworthy achievements are set forth—on and off stage. He is, in his care-free twanged on a guiachievements are set forth—on and on stage. He is, in his care-free twanged on a guild moments, a yachtsman; or stroke oar on a boat club's eight; or, he might have been a football or baseball player in his younger days; or, mayhap, a pole vaulter, or sprinter. At any rate, an athlete—though now of the drawing room species.

It all makes for good reading, and a better salary for the star; though his collaborators in the vineyard suffer. The manager suffers, since he must deal with a frankenstein of his own invention-a monster that Hot for Art's Sake comes back to bite the hand that feeds him. In the case of a woman there is never much sympathy wasted on the managers, since womanhood from time immemorial has won its way to the privilege of getting the best, though it doesn't always get it.

OOD business men and women generally make stars; for they know G the simple rules of the American game; to get it while the getting is good. Therefore, with long experience in his trail, the American manager would gladly scrap the star system if only he had the chance-the opportunity. Trouble is, the great American public will not let him-or them, or whoever it is that keeps the star system alive and thriving. Probably the movies are to blame; for it is a simple thing to set a name in electric lights, to make stars overnight, and have the great American boobery fall over each other in the dash for the box office-to see Klara McDougal in "She Whoops to Conquer," or Rudolph Banjo, the erstwhile bootblack, in "The Deuce You Say." Much easier it is to advertise some two-by-four talent that dresses well and struts before a camera than list a dozen nonentities that really make the picture, or the play, but who have no box office appeal; no drawing power-drawing power being an accumulation of forces centered in the spotlight of publicity. Barnum was never wrong. He had it right from the moment he started furnishing pabulum to what he called "the suckers." So it comes natural in the theater business to have formulated a philosophy that may be summed up in the words of the successful showman: "Never give a sucker an even break." The moment a New York theatrical magnate suffers a change of heart, tries to let the public in on something he believes to be strictly honest, another failure is chalked upon the boards that hold records of won and lost. Though managers would give almost everything they own to do away with the star system, they dare not. The star is their means of support; and no one knows it better than the manager, unless it be the star. In fact, if the manager forgets it, the star reminds him; and so the first round is fought-with the star winning out, and the manager taking the count. The public, not seeing behind the scenes, doesn't care who furnishes stars, or plays for stars, so long as it has stars.

NLY in one instance in the recent activities of the theater has the star system been whipped to a frazzle. And that happens to be right here in Washington.

Young Steve Cochran has developed a company of players down at Yesterday's Menace. the National Theater, a company rated one of the best ever assembled, for general all-round repertory, and not a star in the cast.

dged from outside standards there is no star among tional Theater Players. Perhaps in the estimation of some particular player this is wrong; and there is a star. Too, in the opinion of some admirer there may be a star; but, judged from the plays presented, there is no star, since they are all stars. A paradox, but true: Where all are stars there is no star.

In the official roster, where the hand that writes the pay checks keeps tabs, there may be one who draws emolument far greater than that of his fellows-and this should be so, since there are varying degrees of awarding awards. Outside of that, and looking over the list of plays and players, the thing that has made the National Players an outstanding group in the theatricals of America is the old Y. M. C. A. catchword, teamwork.

Years ago, in all the drives for membership, in the collection of funds, in the building up of morale, and what not, the energetic little fellows who whipped everybody into line, and got results, dwelt on teamwork. It perhaps was the beginning of the pernicious go-getter type in America, and, therefore, something that should bring the blush of shame to American cheeks; but, nonetheless, it had its finer points. If teamwork, the kind more happily associated with the winning of great races among college crews, and the establishment of champion baseball and football teams in collegiate circles, brought about the successful combination now happily holding forth on the stage of the National Theater, no man jack will say it nay.

TT is with some pleasure that the commentators on all things the-A atrical in this man's town suffer the departure of winter and the arrival of the summer months; those glorious days that usher in the announcement that the National Theater Players are coming back to the old stand. In the front line trenches all winter, seeing the good, bad and mostly the indifferent in drama, the boys have what really might be called a vacation when the players put in appearance.

The players go to work with a vengeance. They come to brave the heat, or whatever awaits them in the form of weather, and the difficult work of handling three plays in one-getting rid of last week's, playing this week, and preparing for the seven days ahead. That, of course, is no baby's play. Yet, when the curtain goes up on any given Monday night, there they are-starless, and unafraid-ready to deliver the well-known goods.

In name and title there are, of course, leading lady and leading man, but to all intents and purposes even these do not exist. The National Theater Players, without following in anybody's footsteps, have sort of emulated the example of the Moscow Art Players. So it is no great surprise to see the so-called leading man this week playing a part somewhat subservient to a second man; or the leading lady struggling for honors with a minor member of the cast. In the tussle, if this minor member comes out slightly ahead of the game, it makes no never mind, for next week things will right themselves.

So it comes that summer stock as they know it here in Washington takes a deadly crack at the stay system—a system that has caused more worry and fatigue among producing managers than any other institution within the realm of theaterdom. At the same time, this is the method of developing stars-a method that held high vogue in the years agone, when the real stars of America were working heart and soul in the great companies that left heritages to the theater; memories that will never be forgotten.

All because of the statement issued a week ago that the big producers were about to get together and effect a salary cut of from 10 to 25 per tent in all salaries over 50 per. Which, in the movies, means prac ttically all salaries.

It's rather a shock when you've bought yourself an installment plan house and an installment plan car and an installment plan radio to not given the moral and financial backfind that you're not going to have enough money in the fall to meet ing they deserve. the installments; and Hollywood was naturally enraged.

The other producers hesitated. Then Jesse Lasky offered himself as the scapegoat and proceeded to knock 10 per cent flat off all salaries tion under a capable leader and with In his organizations.

So far, Lasky seems to have sacrificed himself for nothing.

For the other producers, buried beneath an avalanche of protest, have promised to let the present salaries stand—at least till August 1—with a threat of bringing the matter up again at that time.

But Hollywood's great majority of more humble and obscure toilers feel that it is just a bit haughty and even highbrow. They feel that it has formed a social four hundred, or rather two hundred and ninetyfour, that intends to be a self-elected aristocracy of Hollywood.

Which, after all, is a bit ungrateful after the way the academy crashed through this week and protested volubly and potently to the proposed wage cut—a wage cut that would affect the humble more closely than the great.

In theater parlance, the Vilma-Banky-Rod la Rocque wedding was a wow.

All Hollywood was there—a mere 2,500 invitations having been issued—and wise cracks flew thick and fast.

Apparently the 2,500 guests chose just about as many varieties of costume. One director arrived in a business suit, with accessories including a top hat and a cane belonging to Cecil B. de Mille. Others had apparently ransacked the wardrobe rooms of the studios for silk hats and cutaways of the vintage of 1903 or thereabouts—such outfits not being the usual mode for the well-dressed man in Hollywood, where it would be much easier to collect 1,000 Arabs, chinks or cowboys than 1,000 back pages from Vanity Fair. Tom Mix pulled the best one (though he spoiled it by laughing himself) by arriving in a coach and four, wearing his famous 10-gallon hat.

All Hollywood was there, all right. Except, as Tom Mix said, Monte Blue—probably because Monte looks so much like La Rocque that it might have caused confusion.

Goldwyn, the producer, gave the bride away (that being, one of his underlings remarked, the first thing he has given away in ten years). But there was a slight hitch before they reached the altar.

The organ started to play the wedding march, all the people rose in the conventional way to peer at the bride—and no bride appeared to be peered at.

Another underling suggested Goldwyn and De Mille were arguing.

Radio Editor of the rost.

How soon is this country going to wake up to the educational possibilities of radio in school work? England has been using it for years, with the result that hundreds of the London public than the country with wireless. that hundreds of the London public schools are now equipped with wireless receiving sets. Australia has taken this medium of instru 'on un to a surprising extent. Even little Denmark has made it a part of the daily school routine, in fact, going all the rest one better by possibly the most adequate governmental appropriation for the purchase of sets any country has yet made. But Uncle Sam slumbers on. When it became known recently that no less a person than Walter Damrosch would give his future time and attention to the development of a plan to provide a series of concerts, supplemented by his admirable musical talks, in an effort to reach the students of American Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Co. has declared his intention to make the inspiring talks of Mr. Damrosch available to at least a portion of the 25,000,000 students of the country.

As a result, it may be confidently predicted that this educational work will be an outstanding development in the 1927-28 radio season. How much support will be given by the United States Bureau of Education, the State and city school authorities, and the

"It is recognized that wireless can never do the work of teachers or textbooks, but it may add to the range of methods at the teacher's disposal," is a message from Australia, which our own educators might well heed. A writer on the subject has rightly said: "If a curriculum is so rigid as to exclude such vast possibilities of seeing and listening to the world's activities as are offered by the cinema and the radio, it might be well to reconsider that curriculum."

Interference Reports Asked by Radio Heads

The Federal Radio Commission has asked Chief Radio Supervisor Terrell to secure reports on interference under the new allocations.

Supervisor Terrell, in turn, has sent a letter to each of the supervisors, asking them to advise him of the extent of the interference between the broadcasting stations, due to heterodyning and other effects of the new allocations. He has requested the supervisors to submit reports at least weekly.

Hooper, one of the Naty, along with Rear Admiral W. H. G. Bullard, retired, now chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, is credited with having inspired the organization of the Radio Corporation of America.

The British Marconi Co. was bidding for some American patents for which there was no market at the time in this country. Rather than let rights get out of our hands, it was the suggestion of Bullard and Hooper that, for

H. A. BELLOWS READS DIPLOMA IN LATIN TO EASE ADMIRAL

Radio Commissioner Translates Document Given Bullard by College.

OFFICER WAS VICTIM OF HIS FRIEND'S JOKE

Had Been Told Honorary Degree Made Him Air Commander.

When Admiral Bullard, chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, returned to Washington recently from Hartford, Conn., where he had been given an honorary degree of doctor of science at Trinity College, it is said one of his old friends at the Army and one of his old friends at the Army and Navy Club, pretty much of a wag, having had a glance at the diploma, remarked that the college authorities must have been having a little fun at the admiral's expense.

"Here it says," his friend went on, pretending to read the diploma, which was in Latin, "that this makes you who were the high admiral of the waves now the high admiral of the air, and that having had the opportunity of riding the waves of the sea, this gives you the privilege of riding the waves of the air."

Encouraged by the admiral's apparent

Encouraged by the admiral's apparent consternation, the friend is said to have added considerable more information of a humorous character which, he gave the impression, that the document set forth.

Whereupon the admiral's curiosity became aroused, and it having been a long time ago since he had read any Latin, he turned to Commissioner H. A. Bellows, asking him if he could make anything out of it.

Read It at Sight.

To his amazement, Commissioner Bellows took the document, which would have floored nine out of ten men not up on their Latin, and read to off with the ease that an ordinary person reads an inscription in English.

It proved to be the conventional wording of the usual diploma and of course not to contain any of the humorous references attributed to it.

The mystery of Commissioner Bellows so nonchalantly being able to read it off was explained by the fact that in addition to his being a Harvard graduate, and a former member of the faculties of both Harvard and the University of Minnesota, Mr. Bellows has made quite a name for himself as a translator, rotable of the Will. lows has made quite a name for himself as a translator, notably of the "Historia Calamitatum" of Abelard and the 'Poetic Edda," the last translation having been done for the American Scandinavian Society saving been done for the American Scandinavian Society. After wrestling with such musty old documents as those, the translation of the admiral's Latin diploma proved the easiest of tasks.

Fruit Growers Use Radio. California fruit growers are using radio effectively in warning orchardists against the unexpected appoach of frost. It is the custom at such times to place heaters in the orchards. Radio has proved the first fast means of communication in this respect and plans are now under way to considerably elaborate the system.

Danish Schools to Install Radio. An advanced position is taken by Denmark, which contemplates radio instruction as a part of the daily public school routine. In this work a difficulty encountered is the installation cost of radio sets in the schools, but, according to the Danish plan, this will be done at the expense of the government.

Two new models in receiving sets, a new speaker and a "B Power Unit" are announced by the Atwater Kent Manufacturing Co., of Philadelphia, as distinctive developments in its products for the forthooming radio year.

This company has not heretofore offered a so-called "B-Eliminator," in spite of the heavy demand for them from radio users and the wide sale of this accessory during the last two seasons. It now develops, that the company's laboratories have been working steadily for three years to perfect an instrument to supply B power and has produced a unit with a number of new features, the most important of which is a gas tube with a life in excess of 2,000 hours.

It is asserted that the new product is free from "hum," which has been one element of uncertainty in B-eliminators heretofore. Another feature is that the operation of the R unit is automatte.

element of uncertainty in B-eliminators heretofore. Another feature is that the operation of the B unit is automatic, due to a built-in "relay" which is actuated by the power supply switch on the receiving set. Provision is also made for connecting the A battery and charger to the B unit, in which case the relay also automatically starts and stops the charger. The new instrument is designed for alternating current, 60-cycle circuits with 110 to 115 volts.

NEW ELECTRIC SERVANTS

Every woman would like to have electric lamps on both sides of her dressing table mirror, but few wall brackets are properly arranged for her. However, shaded lamps are made in pairs that can be attached to the frame of a mirror by screw clamps. These are even better than wall brackets for the purpose. Some are equipped with a convenience outlet to serve a curier or any other purpose. A single cord connects the pair of lamps and the extra outlet to any wall or baseboard socket for current supply.

Convention Was Enthusiastic.

The Minneapolis convention was an enthusiastic one. More than the average number of delegates attended and took clear-headed part in the daily routine. Able discussions of vital import to the trade provided serious entertainment and educational profit. The class of exhibits was exceptionally good. It is regrettable that the public, being in this case the good entires of the Twin Crities, were not better posted as to the opportunity of viewing for themselves just what the master plumber can do to render them comfort and luxury, as well as safeguard the health of their homes. The primary object of these annual exhibits is to enable the public to inspect the latest sanitary devices for home comfort and health and thereby secure a better understanding of the plumbing or heating contractor who installs them.

There is vast opportunity for our trade and its organization to carry on the real, serious, dignified intentions of its incorporated body.

The work of the scholarship committee stands out as a glorious and shining example of what our trade may undertake with honor and credit to its calling.

Ever since the inception of the idea that automatic sprinklers installed in buildings would extinguish fires and prevent excessive fire loss, the business of installing sprinkler systems has been in the hands of a few concerns outside of the plumbing and heating contractors were not welcome within the realms of the sprinkler systems' domain until quite recently, and now matters are arranged so that plumbing and heating contractors can go into the sprinkler business successfully and accomplish results quite satisfactory to the fire insurance associations and other agencies which have authority over the fire protection problem.

peated references to the trade's great need for proper understanding and appreciation of the dignity and responsibility attached to the conduct of its honorable calling, as well as its relation to public health; a greater dignity for the trade, free from all old-time ravenous, so-called humorous, low down ridicule and abuse; a dignity demanding the careful regulation of each individual's business activity, so as to insure respect and approval of his community.

The responsibilities of the master plumber are many and growing, both as an individual and as to his relationship with the public at large. He is now being happily regarded as an important factor in the preservation and safeguarding of the public health.

mence activities for the fall and winter with a complimentary reception and dance at one of the leading hotels of the city. This event will be given in September, and it is expected that some of the national officers of the order will be in attendance. About 150 members of the division and their families have signified their intention of attending the national convention of the order in Buffalo, July 19. Joseph A. Daly has been appointed chairman of the delegation representing the District of Columbia at this convention, and from reports received by the national secretary this will be the largest convention held in many years.

Having in mind aims, objects, dignity and responsibility, may we be pardoned if, with the best of intentions, we make reference to another feature which seems to us to posses situations fraught with potentialities that may eventually somewhat handicap the worthy intent of the organization. Speaking freely, as among friends, we refer to the manner and cost of convention entertainment. In the past, the organization has gone on record as opposed to great and costly entertainment. If each city endeavors to outstrip all previous efforts, will it be possible, in the days to come, to find a meeting place able to receive and hold our well-attended gatherings?

All work and no play is against every rule and precedent. Too much of each is unwholesome and unprofitable. There should be reason in all things. In their pardonable anxiety to act the part of warm and generous hosts, local organizations enter into considerable expense. Are the ways by which money must be obtained as carefully calculated as the part of wisdom should dictate? Too frequently, we regret to say, does our trade, unfortunately and without the proper reflection, assume that the ones from whom they purchase materials should be called upon to contribute.

Poor Plumbing Bad Health

It is the "unseen" plumbing that carries away the waste-and keeps noxious sewer gases from entering rooms. Sanitation within a building would be impossible without this concealed system of piping.

This is the best possible reason why plumbing should be installed correctly-not by a handy man-but a licensed Master Plumber.

Proper health protection is not certain any other way. Yet the greater comfort and freedom from upkeep expense alone is sufficient cause for selecting a reliable plumber.

Practice no FALSE ECONOMY on your plumbing! Assurance of good material and workmanship is certain ONLY when good judgment selects the men to install it.

DEAL DIRECT WITH YOUR PLUMBER. It pays to patronize members of this association.

Comfort plus Safety

Aside from the increased riding comfort they give to any car, the New Gabriel Snubbers are also a sensible investment in driving safety.

Loss of steering control, due to striking a heavy bump at speed, is not an unusual occurrence, and many a car has been ditched for no other reason

Gabriels control the vicious spring recoil that throws you and your car into the air-and so aid in holding the road whenever a heavy bump is struck.

GREAT NEW 62"

New Standards of Performance— New Quality-New Value-New Luxury

WALTER P. CHRYSLER and his en-W gineers present today a new car—the great six-cylinder "62"—which carries the name Chrysler still more emphatically to the head and front of the procession of engineering and manufacturing progress.

The great new Chrysler "62" is deliberately designed to give so much more for the money invested than any or all of the fifteen-odd sixes of similar size and type now made in this country, that the shrewd buying sense of more than 500,000 American buyers will bring realization that they simply cannot approach "62" value in any other cars.

No one can see, or drive, or even read the general specifications of the great new "62" without marveling at the value which Chrysler Standardized Quality has packed into its appearance, its manufacture and its unapproached performance.

Standardized Quality-extending its benefits to four great cars—specifying uniformity in high grade steels and all other materials -setting new standards of precision manufacture - cutting down costs but always raising quality to higher levels-this exclusive Chrysler principle makes it possible to produce in the great, new Chrysler "62" a six that leaps beyond the bounds of all competition.

Drive the great new "62" today. Any Chrysler dealer will gladly give you complete proof of its supreme value.

Persons React Differently in Coast City on Hearing Traffic Bell.

ARREST RARELY IS MADE

By ERWIN GREER, President, Greer School of Electrical and Automotive Trades, Chicago, Ill.

Los Angeles' jaywalker ordinance, that fool idea that couldn't be put over, is going over like a million dollars.

So successful has the city's ordinance against jay walking been that officials of other cities are continually asking the chief of police had it is done.

The answer is simple. Los Angeles just does it.

When it was first proposed to require making such an ordinance totek. But everyone put his shoulder to the wheel, an extensive educational publicity campaign was put on, the curtain finally went up, the orchestra hit the air with "The Jay Walker Blues," and the show has been a howling success ever since.

There is a world of difference between the way the office and store employes, accustomed to being downtown, obey the signals, and the way the infrequent visitor downtown, like the women shoppers, respond. No matter whether engaged in an earnest conversation while hurrying along with a friend, the downtown man or woman will stop or go almost instinctively upon hearing the traffic bell ring.

The average woman shopper, however, will plod along like one of the sheep in a herd in the face of traffic bells, sleigh bells, chimes, cow bells, shrill police whisties or what not. Alone, in the middle of the crossing, the great awakening comes.

Elderly people are the greatest offenders against the jay-walker ordinance. There appears to be no cure for them.

The women are, by far, greater offenders than the men.

And some women actually defy the traffic officers to stop them. Seldom

Greater power-more brilliant performance Roomier-Finer and more luxurious bodies

Here is an unprecedented thing to do.

Essex Super-Six is the outstanding success of the year. Its sales have topped all records. Its popularity with thousands and tens of thousands of owners has made it the most brilliant accomplishment the industry has known.

But Essex engineers have now created an even greater and finer Essex Super-Six. So startling are its advantages that at the height of the selling season, with the market stripped of Essex cars and thousands of unfilled orders on hand, production was interrupted to give buyers a greater and finer value.

We are now showing the finest Essex value of all time. Though factory production is the largest in our history and has recently been greatly increased, your promptness in ordering alone can insure delivery ahead of the multiplying thousands who want this new Essex.

FOR 24 hours, a Challenger Safety Stutz ran at an average speed of 68.44 miles per hour around the tough, old Indianapolis Speedway on April 21-22.

The car was a standard, stock 5-passenger Sedan, fully equipped, and just as delivered to the buyer-so certified by the Society of Automotive Engineers' Advisory Committee of the American Automobile Association.

And this car, over the most difficult track in America, and despite wintry weather conditions of snow and sleet, established 16 new American Stock Car Records; for 24 Hours, for 1000 miles, and for 14 intermediate times and distances. All of them Official Records made under A. A. A. Auspices.

Yet, during the entire 24 hours of this record-breaking run, not once was it necessary even to put a wrench to the car.

And, because the car was strictly stock, in every way, shape and manner, and so officially affirmed before and after the run, you are assured of this same dependability and speed ability in every Challenger Safety Stutz on our floor.

Let us give you a demonstration in an exact duplicate of the winner.

just completed a new proving ground with a 21/2-mile concrete track, which is said to be one of the fastest motor speedways in the world. The course is the same length as the famous Indianapolis speedway, but is oval in shape instead of rectangular, with corners rounded. The easier turns are banked at such a steep angle as to permit of far greater speed than is possible on the Hoosier course.

The new testing plant embraces 400 acres of ground, which will, it is believed, leave ample room for development beyond the present comprehen-sive plans, if further means or methods of testing are discovered later.

Provision has been made for a large airplane landing field inside the speedway oval. Plane runways in this field will be of considerably greater length than at the landing field maintained by Packard for years and only abandoned with the acquisition of the new property.

Every Test Provided.

At the track, which represents the very latest thing in reinforced road construction, a combination gate lodge, garage and testing laboratory is nearing completion. It will provide, with the outdoor equipment, every known facility for the testing of automobiles. The gate lodge part of the building has living quarters for those in charge of the grounds and fully equipped quarters for engineers and for mechanics and testers.

PROPOSAL TO DIVIDE WATERS OF BORDER OFFERED BY MEXICO

Protocol to Be Submitted as Working Guide for River Body.

TECHNICAL STUDY MADE ON VALUE OF PROJECT

Tia Juana, Colorado and Rio Grande May Be Ruled by Parley.

(Special to The Washington Post.) Mexico City, July 9.—Mexico has under consideration a detailed plan for remedying the old problem of the international rivers of the United States and this country, it is learned here officially.

and this country, it is learned here officially.

The rivers in question are the Colorado, the Tia Juana and the Rio Grande. The question of the manner in which the waters of these three rivers shall be distributed between the two countries has frequently occasioned some difficulties between Mexico and the United States, in view of the fact that no general convention exists which could be applied to the problem to solve the claims of agriculturists of both countries, and above all to determine exactly the respective rights of the two nations to the waters of these rivers.

To the end of resolving this old dispute, the Mexican Secretariat of Agriculture and Public Development has made a comprehensive technical study of the whole situation, with a view to laying the affair before the United States Government in the hope of bringing about, in this manner, a treaty between the two countries which would definitely fix the status of each in the matter.

ing of motor cars presented to the Mexican government an initiative proposing the formation of an international board of waters, to

for the distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, the Colorado and the Tia Juana. Mexico accepted this initiative, indicating that it was in accord with this project, and that it would soon name commissioners to act as its representatives on the international board of waters, these to function in accordance with a protocol formulated by the Secretaries of Agriculture and Public Development.

Development.

It is this protocol, it is learned here, that is now receiving the study of the Mexican government. The plan has been completed, and is now in the hands of President Calles. When the president's approval is given to the project it will be presented to the United States Government. Tenets of Protocol.

The principal tenets of the protocol

are substitutially as follows:

1. To obtain all indispensable technical data that must be known, in order to determine the necessities of each country as regards the international waters of these rivers

2. Once these data have been gathered

2. Once these data have been gathered and properly interpreted, they will be placed into a set of rules of distribution, through the medium of a treaty that will be signed by all the commissioners of Mexico and those of the United States, and which will afterward be submitted to the consideration of the respective governments for their final approval.

3. In case that the governments of both countries are unable to reach an accord the problem shall be submitted to international arbitration before the tribunal of The Hague, and in accordance with the provisions of the International Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Nowhere A Single Compromise With Quality

Knowing Hupmobile's reputation for high quality, you will be frankly amazed at the extra value in beauty and equipment that now surrounds the new Hupmobile Six-the closest-priced Six in America.

Distinctive low body lines with varied colors, clear vision bodies; genuine mohair upholstery; tilting beam headlights controlled from steering wheel; highest grade hardware; instruments grouped under glass, indirectly lighted; solid walnut steering wheel-all bespeak the attention to exterior details.

Supporting these features of comfort and luxury is an unusual ease of driving and control, due to advanced steering design and positive four-wheel brakes.

Smoothness is inherent in the Hupmobile Six engine by reason of the extra heavy, rigid crankshaft, balanced reciprocating parts, manifold heat control and a special vibration damper.

Now incorporating a full 10% higher quality with no advance in price, Hupmobile Six stands out and apart as the one great Six value in the medium-priced field. Arrange now to see and drive this car before making a final decision on your purchase.

all-all until the impulsive Mr. LaJotte gave the West Coast a new thrill the other day by airplane in a spectacular effort to get her to consent to marry him. The daring and the originality of LaJotte caused newspaper writers to call him "the Lochinvar of the skies." and it seems a fitting name. But. alas for the happy ending! Lochinvar's lass, it will be remembered, was quite willing to be kidnaped. And Noreen Burke was not

In the power of her impetuous lover for many hours, she resisted his pleading and her at the Rogers Airport in Los Angeles she gave him a hard little smile and told him 'good-by forever." She wouldn't swear out a warrant and have him arrested, but she wouldn't be his bride. "It was a splendid grandstand play, maybe, but it left me quite cold," she told girl friends when she was back in San Diego.

Even so, the impulsive Mr. LaJotte hasn't given up hope, although he is ready to admit that maybe his courting methods have been a little bit too strenuous. It is safe to say that if he ever tries cave-man tactics again it will be in the face of serious obstacles, for the fair Noreen doesn't intend to speak to him again, or to trust herself unattended in his vicinity.

The girl was kidnaped from Ryan Field in San Diego one pleasant Sunday afternoon, and was not restored to her worried father until late the next day. LaJotte was one of the house guests of Harold Royle, a San Diego banker, and Miss Burke's brother-in-

"Let us go out to the field, and I'll take some of you up," he suggested, and the excitement-hungry young people fell in with his plan at once. Mr. Royle and several others were taken up in turn, Miss Burke remaining on the ground, apparently much interested in the conversation of Dr. John Steen, her favored cavalier of the moment.

"Won't you go up, too, Doctor?" said Mr. LaJotte, looking particularly guileless, "Yes, let us, Doctor," urged the fair Noreen, and the physician gallantly helped her into the plane, and started to follow her.

"I'm testing some new shock absorbers today, Doctor," said LaJotte, innocently. "Would you mind getting out and looking at them when I start the engine? I want to be sure they are working right before I leave the ground."

"Certainly," said Dr. Steen, who is an obliging soul.

There is some confusion as to just what happened then. Some say the aviator waited politely until the physician was out of the plane. Others say that the aviator gave him a helpful little push that speeded his depar-

uous Aviator

In any case, there is no question at all as to what happened next. LaJotte started his engine and opened the throttle. The doctor half leaped, half fell clear of the ship's tail. The plane sped down the runway, took the air and began to climb. The last glimpse of Miss Burke's face showed her surprise, startlement and righteous indignation. As for LaJotte, he grinned and waved his hand.

out through a friend, was as follows: "As soon as Dr. Steen got out of the plane, La-Jotte sped up the motor and, almost before I knew what had happened, the plane was roaring down the field and soaring up into the heavens. I shouted at him, but could not motor. I was not much frightened, but angry, although I thought he might be merely going to fly over my sister's cottage at Sun-

"When I found he was not turning back I became a bit uneasy, and pointed toward the landing field. He held up his fingers three flying me about fifteen minutes he would set

"Fifteen minutes passed, and he continued to fly away from the field, and to climb. I time. I screamed at him to put me down and he wagged his head at me, but continued to drive the machine ahead.

"By the time we got into the vicinity of the Cuyamaca Mountains I knew well enough that I was being kidnaped and was worried. but there was nothing I could do. He swung the plane over in the direction of Twentynine Palms, and I breathed a little easier, realizing what he had it in his mind to do LaJotte's employer, Elwood Loyd, lives in Twenty-nine Palms. I knew him and his wife. I divined that my too-impetuous suitor meant to take me there and try to prevail upon me to get married.

"When we landed, the Loyds came running out to meet us, but before they got within earshot, LaJotte asked me if my ears hurt and whether I could hear. I could hear, right enough, and while he was lifting me from the plane, he proposed-again.

"I have forgotten how often he had proposed. He would never understand that to posed again, and I refused him again, and in words that should have left no doubt in his mine as to my feelings. "By that time the Loyds were talking to us, and LaJotte admitted to them that he had kidnaped me a mild, harmless little flirtation, and wanted to marry me, He told his employer he thought if he could get me alone, and away from the social set of San Diego, I might yield. And he added, ruefully, that he thought his spectacular methods of wooing had hurt his cause in-

"Mr. Loyd, a sensible man, told me to stop worrying, adding that if I wanted to be married, he would help, but if I didn't there would be no wedding. I assured him I was not to be won by modern cave-man stuff, and went away with little Mrs. Loyd, while La-Jotte and Lovd sat and talked most of the While LaJotte talked, and the girl and Mrs. Lovd slept, Charles Burke, the girl's father, was burning up the telegraph wires, and constables and deputy sheriffs were motoring all over southern California looking for her. Excited friends who had seen the kidnaping added melodramatic touches to it that made it seem an even more desperate venture than it was, and there were grave fears for the young woman's safety. Hysterical relatives solemnly assured the police that the Lochinvar of the skies had taken her away into the mountains and meant to keep her a prisoner there.

The next day, after a talk with the Loyds, Miss Burke finally and indignantly rejected the proposal of the aviator. She also learned, to her dismay, that he had not sent a telegram of reassurance to her father the night before, as she had asked him to do. Realizing the sensation her absence must be causing, she sent the following wire to Mr. Burke: "Coming to Rogers Airport, Los Angeles, by airplane, this afternoon. Be

Then she demanded that the crestfallen LaJotte undo some of the harm he had accomplished by flying her home. Convinced against his will that he had gambled and lost, the aviator did so-but that time, Mr. Loyd went with them, just for company, and to prevent the impulsive Mr. LaJotte from changing his mind again.

At the airport in Los Angeles, relatives, friends and mere acquaintances of the girl who was kidnaped were waiting for hours appeared out of the sky. There was a rush when they landed, and for a time the police There was considerable doubt as to whether he was to be arrested and it was not until an hour later that Miss Burke, after conwould not prosecute.

When young women of her own crowd saw her at the Country Club later that evening, and asked her if it hadn't all been thrilling, her eyes flashed angrily, and she replied: "Not a bit. Merely unpleasant and stupid. I am afraid I will never care for even the acquaintance of Mr. LaJotte again. He caused me too much worry, and he caused my family cruel anxiety. Why, he didn't even telephone or telegraph from Twenty-nine Palms to relieve their suspense and let them know I was safe with Mr. Lovd.

"No, Mr. LaJotte played and lost, as they say. Believe me when I say he will never get close enough to me to kidnap me again." Relieved to find he was not to be arrested, the natural exuberance of LaJotte asserted itself. To men he trusted, he declared that his campaign to capture the heart of fair

"Mind you." he added cautiously, "I don't say it will be a kidnaping next time. Once is enough for that sort of thing. I imagine bored a bit. But there are other ways. I tell you fellows I love that girl and I mean to fight for her until I get her or she marries somebody else and kills all hope. And I don't care how ridiculous I may look occasionally. The world is welcome to a laugh

To which Mr. Royle, the athletic brotherin-law of Miss Burke, said snappily: "If this fellow doesn't stop his attentions now we'll find a way to stop them. I have warned him to keep away from Noreen's home, and told him if he is a gentleman he will not force himself upon her in public. San Diego is not a big place and, of course, it will be impossible for her to avoid him al-

"I believe that LaJotte will content himself with the fame he has garnered by this sky courtship exploit, and will subside. One such stunt may seem romantic, but a succession of them will give rise to the impression that instead of being a great lover he is a very great nut, as the boys say." (Copyright, 1927, Johnson Features, Inc.)

New Yorkers know less about their own city than the residents of any other city in the world, in the opinion of Frederick Lewis, who has been surveying a score of America's "big towns" for the Woman's Home Companion. It is significant of the city's ignorance of its own history, he points out, that the Dutchman Petrus Stuyvesant is always called Peter, and the Englishman Henry Hudson is always called Hendryk.

Long before the battle of Lexington, patriotic New Yorkers fought the British regulars at Golden Hill, and this was the first bloodshed of the War of Independence. But New York promptly forgot all about it, just as she has forgotten most of her great men and left it to other cities to honor them. Mr.

"Who in New York knows that Central Park was planned by a committee consisting of George Bancroft, the historian; William Cullen Bryant and Washington Irving? Who cares that George Washington once went picnicking on the grounds of the Jumel mansion with Thomas Jefferson, John Adams and Alexander

"It isn't that New York is indifferent or forgetful. It is not indifferent to the present, nor forgetful of the past. The trouble seems to be that the future is always so enticing that New York has no time or taste for the past."

Mr. Lewis is not much impressed by the New York "rush." He analyzes it thus: "This crowd on the street moves nervously; the feet, when they advance at all, make quick energetic strides; the faces take on the grim determination of a runner about to breast the tape. But in the last analysis the crowd makes astonishingly little progress. The same is true of the traffic. The drivers of the taxis are keen-eved and tense; they are continually squinting around the corners of their windshields: continually getting out of line and in again; sometimes by a quick arc they manage to get ahead of the car in front; but always they are behind the one in front of that. By spurts they smash every speed law known to man; by averages they crawl. In short, the rushing of the New York crowd is mental, not T'S that Mrs. Edwards," the secretary said, as she covered the mouthpiece . I with her hand, "the one who has been telephoning that she positively has to see you right away. If I let everybody in 'right away' who says that's what they must have, I don't know what would happen."

I am always amused at Judith. She is much smaller than I am, and at times she reminds me of one of the high-powered little tugs which slip around the harbors, performing in edible feats with a nonchalant air and benevolently steaming around the big liners attending to their wants. She belligerently defends me against the world and is always ready to shut off the said world if I give a nod.

"Let's see Mrs. Edwards," I said. Mrs. Edwards was at the corner drug store.

She would be there in three minutes. This would have been a figure of speech with most people, but it was a literal statement with my client. The moment that I looked at her good-sized, firm writing, every letter of which was accurately and fully made her T bars well placed, and her specimen of writing fully punctuated, I was sure that she would never understand or overstate anything and that she would invariably arrive on the very tick of the clock. Everything about her emphasized this. She was trig and trim and neat and sleekly fashionable and tidily complete. "And what is your difficulty, my dear?" I asked her. This competent woman did no spite this, I am desperately unhappy, and this is because, in domestic life, my husband simply does not, will not, and seemingly can not, fulfill his part of our bargain with each other. Understand, he is everything that a woman could wish so far as constancy and kindness are concerned.

"When we married, my husband was not doing so well and it was agreed that I was to continue in my work, which is that of being secretary to the biggest man in his line in town. I told that man, my employer, that if I had children I would furnish a substitute for the short time when I would not be at the office. He agreed. Short of this one statement, I have never again mentioned my home to him or the fact of my marriage. I know that there are weeks when he forgets that it ever happened.

"I never telephone my husband in business hours. I never mix up my business and my home. I have steadily gotten increases in salary and am now offered a partnership in the firm which I intend to take.

"My husband's work is no harder than mine, if as hard, and his hours are shorter. He is an architectural draftsman-a good one-and some day will be a fine architect. Our incomes are not quite equal. Mine is the larger, but my husband is the most generous of men-with his money. He will go without a suit that he needs in order to buy something for the house that is pretty.

"So far as money is concerned, I count

"I don't believe in a woman petting and coddling a man in his home while she works as hard as he outside of it."

that I lose my respect for a man who does not keep his word."

"Suppose you tell me just how badly he has failed to keep it," I suggested.

"There is not a single thing in the house that I can leave him to do and be sure that he does it!" Temper blazed out, and was instantly snatched back out of sight. "I have tried alternating the work, or allowing him to choose what he wants to do, or trying to live in hotels, when I really got to despairing, but I never can make him even take the matter seriously. He has never learned to make a bed, to wipe a dish, to close a window, or to-to boil an egg-without doing it wrong!
"He could learn. He learned in one lesson to make pancakes because he is crazy about them, and I never have the time to make them and whatever servant we have never knows how. He learned to see that the but ter does not stand about, but is put in the icebox at once, because he hates rancid butter. But-just try to get him to even help to make a bed. You'd think that his hands were paws. If he counts the laundry, he always loses the slip.

"Let me go away for three days and I come home to find the house plants dying for want of water, the cat starving for want of the milk which has been duly delivered and left to sour, unopened; the windows not closed during a rainstorm and the floors flooded, every shade in the house at different heights and angles, dishes unwashed, if the maid is honest (as is often the case)cigar ashes all over the bedroom floor-you wouldn't think that one normal and usually decent human being could do so much damage and be so unbelievably careless.

"If he were sorry, or if he honestly tried to do better, I would not be here today, Miss But he-he giggles! He seems to think that it's funny. And when he doesn't for the softest, most soothing music in the radio programs-but he never goes near that dining room. Of course, he puts away the butter! But that's all.

"What I do is to lie there and get more and more nervous and then I get mad and then I flounce off that couch and fly out and wash up everything in about three minutes and refuse to speak to him and slam doorsand go up to bed and cry. He follows me around, protesting that he doesn't understand what in the world is the matter with me and that I am the most unreasonable woman alive -and never so much as wipes a dish! By the time I run upstairs I could throttle him!

"Of course, I'm sorry in the morning, and he generously forgives me. He usually ends by taking my face in his hands and gravely asking me if I don't think the work at the office is too much for me. Once I smacked him right in the face then and we didn't speak for a week. "What I want to know is, can you suggest any way, at all, that I can bring him to take just as sane and normal an attitude toward me, as his matrimonial partner, as he would take toward a business partner. He is the soul of honor. He'd die before he would do this sort of thing in any business enterprise. Don't tell me to argue with him. I've done that. He acts just the way that a boy 10 years old does when you make him wipe dishes. He hangs his head and mumbles and says 'yes' and you know he doesn't mean it and you see that he is ready to grin and make a joke of it if you will let him. It's got to that pass that something has to be done. I want to preserve my home, I want to preserve my love for the only man I ever found that I could love, and if I could get this one thing settled I don't believe that there would ever be anything else to menace either my love or my home or our happiness." She shut her mouth at this point with a right under conditions of life which existed up to about 40 years ago.

"Men never did anything about the house because there was no other work for women to do than work about the house. It was a natural division of labor. The white man yowled with rage because he found the Indian allowing his wife to carry a pack while he stalked ahead or behind burdened with nothing but a bow and arrow and his own majestic vanity. But really, that was an economic arrangement. One of them had to be ready to fight a foe or to kill a ferocious animal or to secure meat.

"This same code assigned men to all the heavy jobs and left shelter and the housework to women.

"The only trouble is that men are always slower than women to adjust themselves to circumstances. If you want proof, look at the way in which a hodcarrier's wife and daughters will gain new social levels while he still carries the hod, figuratively if not actually. So, men are still acting on the million-year-old subconscious reaction. That's the reason that your husband follows you around the kitchen, protesting at your tantrum, but not helping you with the work. The way that the work of the sexes used to be arranged, he actually could not afford to take the time to help with the housework, and he had not the strength. Remember that when I was a little girl, a man was likely to have practically every female relative dependent on him, in the course of time.

"That load is rolling off of men. There was never a time in the history of the world when there were so few dependent women, of any age. Men no longer have to stagger under this great load. But they do not realize that. And they are still saving themselves from all the wearing smaller jobs that women used to perform for them.'

Mrs. Edwards was giving me her entire and undivided attention.

"I wish that my husband could hear this," she said. "He is always interested in history and the development of the world and that sort of thing. I have never thought about it in the light of this past experience of men. Tom would understand that."

"I have half a dozen type sheets which contain this statement in an extended form," I told her. "Let Miss Connors, my secretary, give you one. Then you write your husband a letter—type it—and maybe, if I were you. I would put in it one of these legal looking brown binders. Anything to make it seem formal. Tell him exactly what you have told me and then ask him to read these pages that I give you-this resume of the changes that have taken place in the economic status of women in-we'll say, the last 35 years. Put it to him that this is a business statement and that you want his attention-his impartial attention-to it.'

Mrs. Edwards passed out and Judith and I turned to a large and pressing mail and the matter passed from my mind.

Two days afterward Judith put her hand over the receiver and announced: "It's that Mrs. Edwards again."

The voice which hailed me over the phone had relief, laughter and tender happiness

"It worked," the voice cried. "The dear old darling took it wonderfully. Just as you said, it struck his business sense. But, oh. my dear Miss Rice, now I'm so sorry for his bungling, pitiful efforts, I just can't help taking the work right out of his hands, half the time, and doing it for him."

A chimpanzee might be taught to talk with its fingers, as deaf and dumb people talk, more easily than it could be taught to imitate sounds of human speech, in the opinion of Dr. R. M. Yerkes and Margaret S. Child psychologists of Yale University.

"Perhaps the chief reason for the ape's failure to develop speech is the absence of a tendency to imitate sounds," Dr. Yerkes suggests in Popular Science Monthly. "Seeing strongly stimulates imitation, but hearing seems to have no such effect."

Ford as saying: "Man was made to work in the soil. Industry wrongs him when it forces him to spend all his days in a factory, shop, a mine or at a desk. Besides, if we could combine the trade and the farm, we could take up the slacks which are so bad now for both. Farming has its dull easons—men just sit around. The factory has its dull times-men out of work, lying around, bad for them. There ought to be an exchange and could be. We are wrongly organized. We've got away from the early Amer-

"We chose 72 men from the factory, put them on tractors and set them to plow the 400 acres. In 24 hours it was plowed and planted. I remember that as they were at work a group of farmers passed going into Detroit. They stopped and studied what we were doing. It seemed to look dubious to them. 'When we get back we will stop,' they told us in reply to our invitation to come in and see what was doing. A few hours later they came back. Everything n sight had been plowed and planted. "Nagging! Why, for the last three years I've bitten my tongue so much to keep it still that I've made the poor thing scared for life. My husband is perfectly impervious to a hint. I have to fairly boot him to make him see that he ought to do a job or that he ought to do it better. Once in a while my employer keeps me later than half past four. Then I get home late and strike the rush hour and by the time that dinner is over I am pretty tired. My husband will never clean off the table, put away the food and tidy up the dining room. If we have a maid, he will of course, do what I never fail to do. which is to put away the food and clear away the fine Bohemian glass, which is one of the things he likes so well to have in his home and on his table. But if we have no maid, he lifts me up from the table and carries me into the living room and arranges the light at my back and rubs my head and holds my hand and reads to me and hunts snap and ceased to speak. Just as an experiment I also remained silent. That usually starts a person off again, but not this decisive lady. She had said what she had to say and there was nothing to add to it. I looked at her handwriting again and was sure that that was just the way she did everything.

I picked up the man's writing again.

"This is not a new story to me," I told her, "the problem has been increasingly present in my consulting room for the last twenty years. It is a burning question today. To understand it. you have to estimate that women have changed about some things and not about others and that men have not changed at all. Light, gossamer materials have never enjoyed greater popularity than during the sportive days which have just opened the seaon at this resort whose "chic" is world-renowned. New crepe variations-many of them being related to kasha, which will have an important place in the autumn collecions-are masters of the mode at present. Mouslikasha, mouslicrepella, tuslikashas, crepes galore, tchinsou and "mousseline de oie" clothe thousands of the smart women who make an unending procession along the promenade, in sight of the sea whose breezes emphasize the fairy-lightness and gracefulness of these materials-all of which are favored because they accentuate slimness and

Many of these fragile things are bordered with fur-narrow strips of fur that will be seen in many of the collections in August and September. Green dresses of these light materials are often seen trimmed with black fur. Pale green evening gowns are not rare and almond and sage are the most popular shades. A coat of black thin-sou irregularly hemmed with ermine is of the greatest chic but fox is as widely favored as ever, and many of the couturiers have assured me that it will be as much in evidence throughout the coming season. Certainly fox is the most practical of smart furs, lends itself more eadily than any other to combinations with a variety of colors and materials, and for the

In winter they are pardoned by necessity, for necessity pardons many indiscretions, but in the summer months only the best of furs has any raison d'etre, and the worst thing a woman can do is to make use of any others at a time of year when its inferiority is so glaring.

Many French women who for the time being have little money have solved this trimming problem by wearing in the place of furs a simple-scarf of the same material as the dress or coat. This gives the desired finishing effect, costs little, is newer than furs, lighter, more summery, equally graceful, and is always in excellently good taste. Indeed, these are worn by many women of unlimited means, who out of preference choose them for wear in warm weather The smartness of gray for daytime wear is emphasized, and this color will be extremely for something new, and I am just as anxious to gratify their perfectly natural appetite, provided these new things can be achieved without sacrificing any of the good things which already exist.

Recent seasons have been somewhat hard, for I have never found the styles so flattering as they are at the present time, and this makes it hard for me to abandon any of its lovely features.

Solid Color Slenderizes.

A simple, straight-line dress in solid color most assuredly promotes the much-desired slender appearance, and anything added to this must be carefully considered beforehand, for the slightest bit of thoughtlessly placed trimming can add several nounds to a woman's appearance, and the saving of one of these all-important pounds in these days is surely not to be frowned upon. Weighty dresses suggest a corresponding degree of underlying weight, and light dresses imply a light body underneath. I have seen many women, for example, made to appear twice their age by wearing heavily embroidered dresses. And many a wise woman has achieved gracefulness and slenderness despite her stout proportions by wearing well-cut gowns of light weight. Often I have found that trimming on the dress itself would add age, whereas the same trimming-and more -on the sleeves produced the opposite effect, taking attention from the real source of stoutness to the full sleeves, showing slender underneath and at the same time cleverly implying that the dress is also quite full and creating a highly advantageous optical Tucking and pleating will remain popular, as they are two of the best known means of effecting these valuable illusions and trim a dress without adding to its weight-appearance. My skirts will remain short, as they are at present. A very straight line prevails in the back, and the fullness of the skirts is brought to the front. The sleeves, for the most part, are flat, well adjusted above and lightly floating about the hand, with various flares, giving a graceful, sweeping impression. Much Velvet Used.

The materials most in evidence in my new collection will be velvet, crepe de chine and crepe georgette. Davtime colors most in favor with me are "hottle" arcen "chandron" and pink. Snakeskin remains an extremely popular trimming, and I am now executing numerous creations for Parisiennes which testify to the favor in which this material is Velvet will never have enjoyed a greater success than the one in store for it with the opening of the autumn collections, and if I were a woman of moderate means and could afford only one evening gown for the coming season it would certainly be of velvet, black, rich blue or pink, according to which was most flattering. This stately material was seen everywhere last winter. and it is fortunate for many women that their old gowns can in thousands of instances be slightly made over to answer the purposes of absolutely new ones.

"What change would you favor?" you may ask. Well, nine times out of ten I should probably touch nothing but the sleeves. The lines of dresses that were in good taste last year have not changed, so the apparently new dress may be achieved through the simplest of means. If the last year's dress is of black velvet. for example, with a red belt, I should consider replacing the belt by one of gray (for example) and putting in any one of many kinds of sleeves, of georgette crepe, trimmed in some novel way with the same shade. Or I'd leave the red belt and put some red on the sleeves, for red will be a good color this autumn, and it is flattering to most women especially in the cold months. This can be decided according to one's own feel-

Comfort Is First Requisite,

You must first of all feel comfortable, at perfect ease, and let other things follow this mental condition which is the foundation of being well dressed. It is not an unusual sight for us who see so many women in fine clothes to behold one whose body is laden with the best things money can buy but who, nevertheless, because she does not feel self-confident, fails to produce the appearance of a smart woman. What we call 'savoir faire" in France is essential to being one's self and wear the little one with an air that exalts it, than have much money with which to bedeck one's self, and none of the poise-the "savoir faire"-which is the underlying secret of giving the charming appearance. There are certain rules of simplicity and restraint which all women should know and abide by: after this is done one might almost venture the statement that a woman is as well dressed as she feels she is well dressed.

The Winter Tendencies.

Simplicity will remain the keynote of the most distinctive fashions for the oncoming winter season-a much-studied simplicity that satisfies all one's demands upon dress without being in the least conspicuously comnosed. It has been written by some great author that "Art is the concealment of art."

The inquiry should be addressed as follows: Director of the Paris Fashion Service, 31, Boulevard Berthier, Paris

This simplicity I write of is closely related to art as defined in that epigram. This simplicity is the concealment of simplicity. If your garments are chosen and assembled so as to make people comment upon their simplicity at once, they will not be what I am discussing. One's appearance deserves all manner of thought, but traces of this thought should never be prominently in evidence. Subdued trimmings go far toward helping one towards this end. On a black gown of dull satin, for example, I put a trimming of black shiny satin. This scheme is also carried out with other colors. Tucks and pleats, in elaborate designs, afford a most refined and effective trimming, abounding with gracefulness. If you have worn tucks on a certain part of a dress and found them unbecoming for any one of many reasons, this need not cause prejudice, for by putting them elsewhere an entirely different effect may be achieved with a result altogether pleasing

Just as no two faces are alike, no two bodies are identical, and we who are always creating styles for this variety of body types know that bodies are as different as faces. Women are willing to study their faces somewhat before choosing hats, &c., but comparatively few stop to consider their bodies in this way. I can not overemphasize the importance of knowing the body as well as the face and bearing them equally in mind when selecting and assembling what one wears. Kasha cloth has become classical, like crepe de chine and georgette crepe, and much of it will be seen next winter, along with many other woolen materials, especially jersev. Harmonizing trimming will be in best taste, generally speaking.

HOW BABIES LEARN TO TALK

A few seconds after a baby is born it gives a cry. That might be called its "hello" to the world. Then, when the baby is about 3 months old, it begins to "babble"—to make funny, little gurgling noises, as if it really knew what was going on, and was trying to say things. Chinese babies, American babies, Turkish, South African and Indian babies all gurgle in the same way. The race a baby comes from makes no difference at all in the babbling it does when it is very, very young.

It is only a great deal later in the baby's life, when it begins to remember the sounds it hears about it, and tries to imitate them, that the difference in babies is noticed, according to Prof. Karl Buehler, noted German philologist, who is endeavoring to trace back the history of human speech.

At the beginning of the second year the child has the power to give names to objects.

During the early months many things have occurred. It has heard the words "mama" or 'dada' or "papa," and now proceeds to say

But even now, the child's power to say things and express its feelings is little greater than that of the dog, which can express grief and joy, anger and fear by barking. The child, too, uses the few words it has heard and can imitate to express its own feelings

And then suddenly, the child learns that "dada" should be said to the man who holds it in his arms every day, and kisses it good-nisht, and "mama" to the woman who nurses press a feeling but because it is the name of an object which it recognizes. It can now use different tones in saying the same word, to express different shades of meaning.

For several months, the child makes no new progress in talking. It learns new words, but because it can not yet express thought, but only emotion, this is called the single

At the end of the second year, our children learn to use two or more words at one time. This is one of the biggest leaps forward. Sometimes when something has happened to annoy the child, or make him feel deeply about something, he says a whole string of words, running them all in together. There isn't any fixed order of words. The child uses verbs and nouns in the same way. It is always something that happens in its young life that makes the child use a lot of words at this time, instead of the one word which it uses when it is about a year old.

When it upsets its hobby-horse now, it says rapidly all the words it has ever heard and learned, one right after the other. Now the child is ready to learn accent and rhythm. The last great stage of development of speech in the child comes when its way of speaking changes from being like that of any other child in the world, to a way of its own, that is recognized as personal. And at this time it also learns to compare things. It can say, "That is big, but this is bigger." This is the fashion in which babies learn to talk.

Dr. A. H. Williams, formerly of Australia, now of Washington, speaking of these cure-alls, declared that in the minds of the Karen people their pharmacopoeia contains only "tried and tested remedies." They have everything but a patent from some government agency to acclaim them as popular panaceas. Word of mouth advertising has made them favorites for every sort of ail-

They collect soot from their fireplaces, mix it with native oils, chile and decayed fish, and make it into pills, which they sell with the "guaranty" that, placed on swellings, the mixture will dissolve them, providing the patient does not eat anything sour or touch anything made of iron. The latter, Dr. Williams avers, is the joker that permits a way out for the guaranty. The Karens use human milk for eye drons, rhinoceros blood for "that run-down feeling," and paint everybody suffering from any trouble whatsoever. It is a peculiar kind of yellow paint, but it is claimed as sure cure for everything from earache to cholera.

The Karens, like the Chinese, are very polite and will talk for a long time before finally reaching the subject regarding which they have come. "Oh, yes." "Was your basket heavy?" "Oh, there's nothing in it."

"But it looks heavy."

"Well, I just brought you a few leaves for your curry," as he wheeled around to bring out a bundle, "Here, these are sweet potato tops. They are lovely and nice. Here is another kind, a little sour; and here are some bitter ones, and these roots are good as they should be for curry."

The doctor stretched out his hand to receive them, thanking him several times, for it was considered a favor. The fellow acted pleased. There was noticed on his bare arm that he stretched from beneath his rough coat-like blankets a bad-appearing sore. This then, was the reason for the visit and the

But three days after when I was going home I smelled some one frying curry, and that very night the sore started to throb and swell and get hot and hurt, and now it hurts so much I can't sleep. Haven't you got some medicine that will absorb the fry smell in my body and make the swelling go away?"

He was told that there was something better than wind medicine for the fry smells. In a short time the swelling was lanced As the pus and the blood ran out he shouted, 'Oh, there it goes!"

"What goes?" he was asked, as it is never absolutely certain just what is meant,

For measles water with various kinds of refuse is considered a very effective specific, while in case of fevers drinking water is prohibited. The Karens claim that water or any fruit will prove immediately fatal.

"My most gruesome experience," Dr. Williams said, "happened when I was alone one time. I was sleeping in a little house several hundred yards from the big bungalow, where the others were staying. I was awakened about 2 o'clock in the morning by cries of 'Saya! Saya!' This is Burmese for 'Teacher!

"Suddenly, at a turn in the path, we came to the village, all alight with torches and fires. A Karen headman was waiting and took me to the scene of the trouble. It was as small house. The woman and her son had been alone when a man entered, and, being recognized, showed fight. The woman tried to drive him away, but he pulled out his dah and slashed about, evidently intending to kill both.

"The boy's neck had been slashed and one finger cut off, while the woman had a split in her forehead and her left cheek was cut through. Her right arm was badly hurt, while her left arm was cut off just below the elbow.

"I quickly tied up the cuts to stop the bleeding, then bandaged them well, and as I didn't have enough material to stitch all the wounds, and because it was an affair for the police, I hastened them off the nearest hospital, which was about 60 miles away.'

So hardy are these Karen people, he explained, that 'this woman did not die and the boy was still alive some months later.

Dr. Williams and his party were amazed at the hardiness of the children. Boys and girls hardly able to walk are inveterate smokers. In fact, throughout Burma men, women and youngsters all smoke. With all their vices and their superstitions and cureall medicines, they are a care-free, happy-go-everywhere Mr. Tomkins' book is a cross between a pamphlet, a poem and a dictionary. It contains 800 Indian sign words and their meanings. It is the only Indian dictionary of its sort, and an intelligent reader can master the entire vocabulary in a month of leisurely study. In addition to containing exact definitions of hundreds of sign language gestures, the book sets forth the beauty and the imagery of the Indian "tongue."

Mr. Tomkins tells of an old Indian, who, at parting, said to him in the sign language: "May the Great Mystery make sunrise in your heart." And he cites other beautiful expressions of the silent language nearly as eloquent and sustained.

Every time strange tribes of Indians gather, the leaders converse almost altogether in the universal language of signs, even today. Mr. Tomkins recalls that the summer President Lincoln was killed there was a great gathering of all the tribes to the east and south of the country of Little Raven. Twenty-five tribes were represented. Some had never seen men of the other Indian nations. Yet Little Raven told Tomkins that that when they met near old Fort Abercrom bie, on the Wishita River, they all "talked" and to good purpose by means of signs.

The Indian sign language, Tomkins says is the foremost gesture language the world has produced. It was probably the first American language and certainly has remained the only language comprehended by all the tribes.

"It may be," he surmises, "that it was the had so aroused my interest. During the times of trouble between the whites and Indians I have often gone among strange tribes and, because of my knowledge of sign talk, have always found friends among them. On many occasions I have been able to help them in difficulties arising through mutual misunderstanding. Gestures were man's earliest method of communication. Like tone of voice, they indicate clearly and distinctly not only literal meanings, but also various moods and finer shades of meaning impossible for words or mechanical gestures alone to suggest.

"Of course, Indians in their gestured sign language may present either a spiritless succession of set signs or a fully expressive pantomime of eloquent gestures, depending upon the amount of grace and feeling used. Like actors, those who feel what they seek to relate express fuller meanings. Many old plainsmen have said that to see great bodies of Indians skilled in the language of signs was a' beautiful sight, not soon to be forgotten."

Mr. Tomkins says that even if the Indians were actually extinct, there would be profit spite of giddy optimists, the Indians in all their racial purity are passing away or, at least, they are changing their ways and be-

AL'S "RED-CAP"

This is to introduce Al Smith's red-cap, Jim. Officially, he's Chief James H. Williams, head of the army of 500 baggage porters at New York's Grand Central Station. But when the Governor of New York comes to town or leaves for Albany, as he does once or twice weekly, the veteran executive of the largest red-cap organization in the world becomes, for the time, Jim, a private in the ranks again.

'This curious sentimental attachment has grown for eighteen years, since Smith was a struggling young lawyer and Williams a newly nedged red-cap, it is revealed by John R. l'unis, telling the story of the red-caps in the Elks' Magazine for June.

Although both have risen to unusual heights in their chosen fields, the scene that was first enacted in 1909 is repeated whenever Smith appears' at Grand Central. And the governor akes no chances on missing his favorite por ter. Whenever he is to arrive or depart, Williams is notified by wire, and is always on hand.

Other notables, too, have their favorite porters, the investigator among the red-caps reveals. Will Rogers and Doug Fairbanks always wire ahead, specifying what men they want to care for their baggage. The Armours, Rosenwalds and Stillmans are among the wealthy families who have favorite men assigned ahead of time to see them on and off

But millionaires to the contrary, the favorite passenger among the ranks of the red-caps is Babe Ruth.

"Yes, sir. The boys sure do run to fetch that man's bags," is the answer to a query. "A lot of these ballplayers tote their own grips. They travel on an allowance and they don't spend unless they has to. But the Babe, he's one generous man."

Other interesting sidelights on the portering industry revealed in the Elks Magazine article are that the red-caps receive salaries of from $40 to $80 a month, depending upon length of service, and manage to average about $2,000 a year with tips; that they prefer traveling salesmen as clients, because they have expense accounts and tips are certain and generous, and that a quarter is the average tip received.

press anger he places the right hand against the forehead and twists it around to indicate the twisted brain."

Mr. Tomkins says that Indian signs have not only beauty and feeling and directness, but they express a great variety of meanings, of many shades. An Indian, knowing 500 signs (Tomkins' book has 800) can be a really fluent talker and say about all the important things that seem to need to be said in an ordinary lifetime. Five hundred signs or word-symbols really constitute an exceptional vocabulary.

To express the thought "done," or finished an Indian brushes his hands together. He beckons with his finger when he wants you to approach nearer. When he wants to give word of an escape he crosses the wrists, hands closed, then moves them apart. To indicate mourning, he places his fingers at the back of his head as though shearing the hair, then indicates with his forefingers imaginary tears running down his cheeks. To say "dance," he raises both hands and wriggle them up and down. To convey the idea of corn, he goes through the motion of shell-

"ACCIDENT" BRINGS $10,000,000 SAVING

When Dr. Marvin Pipkin stood six electric light bulbs on a Cleveland conference room table not long ago and flipped them over with a careless gesture he started something that is saving his fellow citizens about $10,000,000 a year. To a layman his experiment would have seemed of triffing interest. He had simply come into the conference room with a few insignificant frosted bulbs, grayish in color. They were frosted on the inside in-stead of on the outside—but what of that? Well, here's what of that:

Well, here's what of that:
By perfecting practical inside-frosted bulbs he had done what experts had been laughing at for twenty years as an impossibility. He had brought about simplified manufacturing in an industry that puts 300,000,000 lamps annually into our homes and shops. He had given cheaper and better light to 16,000,000 American families. And he had perfected what is said to be the most generally advantageous light source yet devised by man.

All of which Dr. Pipkin accomplished, thanks to a telephone call and an accident to a half-finished bulb—plus his own persistence and chemical skill.

'When I was fussing around with insidefrosting experiments, back in 1919," explains Dr. Pipkin in an interview reported by Kenneth Wilcox Payne in the August Popular Science Monthly, "everybody laughed at me and kept calling me off to tacke something more 'practical.' Inside frosting was an exploded dream. Many experimenters had found that while it was quite possible to frost a bulb on the inside, a lamp thus frosted became as fragile as a blown bird's egg.

"However. I kept experimenting with various acids and types of glass and different shapes of bulb. You see, after a bulb is blown it can be frosted on the inside by etching with a strong solution of hydro-fluoric acid. I knew that after etching a bulb I could pour in a weaker solution and allow it to stand for a time, with the result that the fine-grained texture originally etched in the inner surface would be eaten away and the bulb would be clear glass again, ready to be used over in new experiments.

"I often cleaned bulbs this way in order not to waste them. One day I had just poured a cleaning solution into a lamp on my desk when a telephone call interrupted me. In answering the phone I accidentally tipped the bulb over a d spilled the acid out before it had had time to clean off the inside etching. Later, when I returned to my experiment, I was careless enough to drop this inside-frost-ed and half-cleaned bulb onto the floor. By all rights it should have smashed to pieces. Even a clear glass bulb might not have stood the drop. But this theoretically very fragile inside-frosted bulb just bumped on the floor and rolled under the desk unhurt And that's all there was to my discovery. You see, it was all just a little accident."

By perfecting inside-frosted lamps Dr. Pip-kin has provided bulbs that are almost shock proof; he has relieved the eye strain with glareless light, and he has given us 10 to 15 per cent more light for our money.

A Walking Shell.

From childhood I have been familiar with the horseshoe crab. I found it large and small on the beaches of old Cape Cod. I watched it creeping along the bottom of salt water creeks, and always, even to this day, the impression made by this strange little creature of the sea is that it is an animated shell. In other words, there is so little visible body that it gives the impression of having the legs attached to the shell,

As a matter of fact, these horseshoe crabs king crabs, as they are also called, are not true crabs. Some scientists now class them along with scorpions and spiders, in-stead of with crustaceans. The probability is that this curious creature is a descendant of the long-extinct trilobites, which ceased to exist in the coal age. The young horseshoe crab bears a remarkable resemblance to the

Stupid looking as these "crabs" are, they are rather interesting. During the mating season they fight among themselves. This is usually in June or July. At this season of the year they gather in shallow water and battle for their mates. Because the shells are arched and more or less hollow they make considerable noise echoing and clattering when the crabs clash out of water or partly out of ter. The eggs are deposited in holes oped out in the sand, and these holes are t for the waves to fill. The eggs hatch in about a month.

This is the story of a ruffed grouse, the o-called partridge of the East, which demonstrates how all-possessive is the love of home and the sense of responsibility in some of our and the sense of responsibility in some of our feathered friends. The story comes to me direct from Frank S. Towle, of Holton, Mass. "One day in May I proceeded to an unfinished job in my woodlot," says he. "A large chestnut tree was to be cut up for firewood. It lay where I had felled it on Washington's Birthday, deep in a laurel tangle. I began at the lower end to cut it into 8-foot lengths. After about fifteen minutes of choosing. After about fifteen minutes of chopping I took hold of a branch to roll the tree over. A great uproar broke out near the stump end and the bushes were full of feathers as a mother partridge struggled to escape almost certain death, for I was bearing down on her. Finally she got out and flew away.

"Twelve eggs, wonderfully concealed under this log, would have defied detection by the best of hunters. How the blows of my ax must have resounded in her ears through that big tree trunk! How she stuck to her charge until nearly crushed! And perhaps you can guess how I felt when I saw such a mass of feathers that for a meaning that her that for a meaning the state of the stat feathers that for a moment I could not see the eggs. This shows how nearly pinned down she was. "But she could fly. Would she come back?

Very early the next morning I was in the woods again. She had come back, for before I could get to a point near enough to see her on the nest she flew out and tried to lead me away in the time-honored manner of the ruffed grouse. I rejoiced and hastened away to leave her in peace."

An Indictment of Jenny Wren.

Mr. Towle is also responsible for the following observation which shows our common house wren in a bad light. He says:

"On May 30 I was spraying my trees. When I reached the tree where the bluebirds live Mother Bluebird left me in charge. She has been very tame and probably thought I was big enough to protect her property. Just as I turned on the spray Jenny Wren appeared in the tree. Eight in front of the spray and within 8 feet of where I stood she went into the bluebird house. Even then I did not suspect trouble. Presently I saw something drop. She was dropping the eggs of the bluebird on the ground. All four eggs were thrown from the house and a bird almost ready to hatch in each. Each egg was sliced through the middle by her sharp bill. Can you beat it? Think of her waiting for a chance like that and then boldly rushing in while my engine was running and the spray It all happened so quickly that I could hardly believe my eyes. For the protection of the rest of our bird family, which was quite large, I took Jenny's house down and destroyed her nest. We did not feel that we could befriend her after what had hap-Yes, this is a sorry indictment of Jenny

I have known for some time that some house wrens are given to the pernicious habit of destroying the eggs of other birds in their vicinity. I doubt if all wrens have the habit. I have seen no evidence of it with the wrens nesting near my home. But Mr. Towle's experience serves as a warning. Wrens need watching.

Again the Maternal Cat.

To an already long list of stories of the ma-ternal instinct in the common house cat, Mrs. Katherine A. Roberts contributes this: "While walking through the wood my brother heard the crying of a young gray squirrel and discovered it hanging from the limb of a tree. Finally the little animal fell at his feet. He

Finally the little animal fell at his feet. He picked the baby up and found he had been injured quite badly, as if another animal had attacked him. His eyes were not yet opened and he was helpless. After vainly trying to find the nest, my brother tucked the little squirrel in his pocket and brought him home. "Our cat had three kittens about three weeks old and my little girl said, 'Let's see if Blackie will take care of it.' We feared the cat would make a meal of the squirrel. Instead she licked him all over, cleaned up his wounds, and has taken care of him ever since. As soon as he was big enough he began to play with the kittens and seems quite at home with his foster mother."

Quite in keeping with the action of this cat was the action of a cat in Chester, Mass. She had established herself and four kittens in an old sap-gathering tub. One kitten was in an old sap-gathering tub. One kitten was given away. The next day the old cat brought in two large chipmunks and one baby chipmunk and put them in with the kittens. Plainhe had adopted them instead of killing

A Crow That Would Catch Snakes.

BROWN THRASHER FEEDING

Some time ago I received an account of a crow which was observed carrying a snake and pursued by two other crows which were trying to get the snake. A good birdman suggested that possibly a mistake had been made in identification and that the bird carrying the snake really was one of the carrying the snake really was one of the smaller hawks and the two crows were attacking this bird instead of merely trying to get the snake. Here, however, is some direct evidence which proves that crows may be snake killers. It comes from Mrs. E. L. Grondahl, of Vermont. She first reports having seen a crow fly over her car with a garter snake so large it could hardly lift it. Then snake so large it could hardly lift it. Then she tells the following story:

"One time a neighbor of ours had a tame crow which used to fly over and sit on my shoulder while I worked in the garden. That year small snakes were very numerous. The crow would spot one from his perch and drop like a shot on the poor victim. He moved so quickly that I was never able to see whether he struck the snake on the head or on the back of the neck. The reptile was always eaten at once as a rare titbit, much joyful talk on Jim Crow's part going on all the time.

"This crow used to lie on his back, kick his heels in the air and tease to be played. with. He became so expert in fending off fingers that it was almost impossible to touch his black shirt front. If I were busy and refused to play he would pull out my hairpins. He knew there would be trouble then. A rubber cord fastened to a nail would keep m busy for hours and the family in shouts

Tales of Real Dogs By Albert Payson Terhune Toby, the Parson's Famous Mongrel

I told you the story of Rab, hero of Dr. John Brown's wonderful book, "Rab and His Friends." Here is the true tale of another dog; told also by Dr. Brown, to whom the dog belonged during the doctor's childhood. As Brown and his brother were passing the waterside, on their way home, one id afternoon, they saw a group of street children lugging along a scared little mongrel which they were planning to Brown's heart was touched by the poor puppy's fate and by the elfin prettiness of the little cur. So he emptied his pocket of the few coppers he had with him; and he and his brother bought the mongrel from the band of youthful executioners.

They named him "Toby" and carried him home. But the Brown household was ruled over by a grim old grandmother, who hated dogs and had refused to allow one of them around. Also, Brown's father was a some-what stern Presbyterian minister who was what stern Presbyterian minister who was not likely to consent to this new pet's pres-

clerical visits with a nondescript little mon-grel tagging along at his heels. So at such times, Toby was shut indoors. That is all the good it did. By some wile or other, the mongrel always managed to escape, and to follow his master. Sometimes he would trail the minister, oftener he would take a short cut which brought him out somewhere in front of him.

Then, after a long pause, a black shining snout pushed its way steadily into the pulpit and was followed by Toby's entire body.

There was something touching in the human and humane trait of this dour old Scottish preacher, his love for the ugly and helpless little mongrel that had won its way into his reserved heart. He seems to have been every bit as devoted to Toby as was Toby

He did not even resent the tittering scandal of having a mongrel dog occupy part of his sacred pulpit on this Sabbath. Nor, after a while, dld he even pretend to be annoyed when Toby overtook him on his round of pastoral calls.

Perhaps so much unaccustomed favor went to the once homeless little cur's head, for presently he began to presume on his posi-tion in the household. He lost his early air of humility and adopted something of a swagger. Not even the presence of the hostile grandmother had the power any longer to make him cringe.

But at last Toby went too far. Out of sheer mischief he stole a large leg of mutton. It was so big and heavy he could scarcely drag it along. Nor was the meat improved by being dragged through the dust and being This gave the grandmother the chance she had been waiting for-a really excellent ex-

LVATORE SCHNE

By ERNEST POOLE

ANK Gott, he's a Schneider!" old Otto would mutter deep relief. And so he was deep relief. And so he was—a Schneider, huge beyond all bounds. As he sat at the cashier's desk in the snug little butcher shop of his sire, the prodigious body of Salvatore hour by hour overflowed like a wagonload of hay, until only the bending, creaking legs of the chair remained in view.

chair remained in view Customers glanced at him in surprise; star-tled bables took one look and ducked their heads in speechless fright. But even bables learned to trust and gaze in solemn wonder For through the whole vast labyrinth of his veins the Schneider blood flowed quietly, as it had flowed for long generations, while from morning to night the eyes were serious, steadily fixed, as Salvatore made out the

But blood is a mysterious thing. Already it had produced this exuberance out of Otto and Margarita, his wife, who were both round little people. What other surprise lurked deep in this fortress of flesh? Otto had never cessed watching. He was taking had never ceased watching. He was taking no chances.

Nineteen years before, in that mighty welding of peoples which is to bring forth some day a strange new race of men in the hybrid city of Greater New York Otto had become a daring pioneer. Reckless for once in his life, romantic and blind with emotion, he had married the lovely young daughter of an had married the lovely young daughter of an Italian green grocer near by. But when he had roused to what he had done and its possible bearing upon his career; then Otto had opened his steady blue eyes and had never quite closed them since.

On the christening day, when Margarita in all the appealing weakness and charm of brand-new motherhood, begged that the bambino be named Salvatore, Otto gave in, But this was the last of Italy's triumphs. Day by day and year by year, every trace of that fiery land of the south was toned away. Margarita grew plump and submissive and beaming; Otto grew stout and cheery and plump. And working in happy domestic accord, they had bred in the pliable soul of their son all the virtues of order, frugality, thrift and hard, patient application to work.

So here the budding monster sat, flower-ing slowly but surely into a sober business man. And the danger sprung from the reckless past seemed buried forever behind. Salvatore suddenly heaved a monstrous, quivering sigh.

A lovely April day was nearing its end. The air was delicious with fresh, earthy odors. Even the ragged old tree across the Street was donning a delicate garb of green. Children were scampering, shouting like mad; old people were blissfully dozing on door-steps; important young lovers came slowly by. The genial sun's last beams poured over the tenement roofs and bathed it all in a rich, warm light. And from the North River be-yond, deep and muffled and strangely disturbing, sounded the voice of an ocean liner outward bound for the world of the winds and the rolling waves eternally free. Restlessness, the insidious longings of nights and days, tugging at the heartstrings—all burst softly forth in Salvatore's sigh.

Then he began making out a new bill: Two pounds sirloin steak at 50c ...

Three pounds wierner schnitzel at 40c. 1.20
One pound at once, with a crash of drum and cymbal, a hurdy-gurdy wheeled into action close by the open door. The noise was deaf-ening. With a frown of indignation Salva-tore looked around—and stared.

Through the open window at his elbow girl was gazing at him in amazement and delight. When Salvatore scowled with all the annoyance of pompous 18 her eyes only sparkled the brighter, her head nodded twice in vigorous approval, and in Italian she

"Madre de Dio, come splendido quel nomo, come magnifico!" Salvatore understood; his rosy, cheeks turned suddenly a darker hue, and at this she threw back her airy young head and laughed so joyously that even he relented. On his face there appeared a quiet, indulgent smile; as a huge Newfoundland dog might stare at a kitten, so Salvatore looked down upon the girl. And, seeing this, she gave an odd, graceful hitch to her skirts, shifted her tambourine with a tinkle and stood there, wholly oblivious, under his eyes.

Over her head was a kerchief of gray with little gold spangles; from under the edges the soft black hair strayed in negligent, lazy fashion, and under the black arched brows were two assertive gray eyes that now looked curious, prying with eager scrutiny right into Salvatore's soul.

With a nervous laugh he tossed her a dime She caught the coin in her tambourine, looked at it, flushed like a child and then flashed upon him a smile so intimate and warm that Salvatore grunted and fell back aghast. And at this the girl sprang nimbly away. V her old father she seized the crazy piano trundled it swiftly down the street. And vatore, left alone, gazed dumfounded into the deepening twilight, his two great black yes in scandalous disaccord with the nim; twinkling, eager, restless, dazed, almost ready to flash.

But in the morning, running one ponderous finger slowly and carefully down the columns of figures, his heavy brows had lowered again, the eyes were buried, the whole mammoth face was sluggish as before.

When again the drum and cymbals crashed and those disturbing gray eyes gazed in at him he slowly turned and surveyed the creature in grave disapproval. She dropped her eyes and stood abashed, and with a grunt of satisfaction Salvatore resumed his work. After a time he glanced up again. She was standing motionless, both hands hanging limp at her sides. She did not even raise her eyes to his, but stood with grave interest, watching his work.

So she came day after day in the balmy weeks that followed, derisive no longer, sneer-ing and prying no longer, respectfully cuous, humble, strangely intent, waiting until he should toss her the coin. The coin was his sign of dismissal, and the girl always obeyed. And now, with the first sharp thrill of uneasiness gone, he felt safe, this colossal nan of 18. The whole silent drama was hid den from Otto and Margarita by the high counter behind. And Salvatore, who until now had barely looked on the face of a woman, would look at the stranger with all the serene assurance of a sagacious old man of the world, and her big eyes would open wide and look frankly back into his.

"My name is Gemma," she said abruptly in the midst of one of these mutual stares. Salvatore good humoredly nodded and bent again over his work, feeling a curious, brand-new tingling up and down his spine. 'I knew you could," she said softly, still in Italian. Could what?" growled Salvatore.

"You are doing it now—speaking like me! You are Italian! I knew it! You are Italian

Salvatore looked hastily round, saw that he was alone in the shop, gave a grunt of relief, turned back and surveyed her in

"How old are you?" he asked gruffly. Gem-ma glanced over her shoulder, gave that pe-cultarly graceful hitch to her skirt, dropped her head on one side and looked at him gravely.

"Seventeen," she said. Salvators stared. He had thought her at least 25, and something romantic inside of him dropped. But she saw the change in his face, and in an instant her eyes had half closed, she drew into herself, grew strange, mysterious, wise, like a gypsy witch.

"I am older than you," she said slowly, with a provoking smile. He gave a short laugh of amusement.

"I am," she said calmly, "because I know more." And all at once she threw back her head and laughed till the tears shone bright in her eyes. She stopped. Her voice bright in her eyes. She stopped. Her voices grew mysterious, thrilling and low: "What do you see," she asked, "on the streets—in the night?" Salvatore watched her uneasily.

"I mind my own business," he growled. She eyed him with scorn.

"That is stupid," she said severely. "You should never mind your own business! You should watch!" He scowled.

"Watch what?" he asked, but the enchantress was already back with the white old man at the curb, and together they trundled the battered old instrument noisily down the street.

trundled the battered old instrument noisily down the street.

In the evening, seated in front of the shop, he loomed unassailable, placidly puffing great circles of smoke. When he saw the pair coming he made no sign, except to throw one backward glance at Otto busily talking far in the rear of the shop. When they stopped at the curbstone, before him and the music burst gayly forth and the enchantress came burst gayly forth and the enchantress came burst gayly forth and the enchantress came forward, her tambourine in her hand—the unfilinching monster only took out a match from his box and carefully held it over the bowl of his already glowing pipe.

When she raised the tambourine slowly over her head and softly beat time to the music, and began bending and turning, her eyes dilating and filling with strange uncanny delight; when as the throb of the music came faster her lithe young body responded twisting toosing and whilling into sponded, twisting, tossing and whirling Into mad rollicking life—still Salvatore the Schneider sat motionless, strictly attending to business, puffing in dignified silence like old Indian warrior chief. But he took out his pipe with a breath of relief as the crowd closed in between them.

She came many nights. She sang. And her crude, deep voice, like her dancing, was of swiftly changing moods, now rough, impatient, fiercely stirring; now low and appealing and hungry, and again radiant, laughters. ing, mocking and gay. Some evenings Mar-garita would slowly steal out of the shop and stand with arms akimbo—beaming. Once with a sudden suspicion, she cast a look of uneasiness down at her precious son, but the giant gave such a stony grunt that Margarita breathed easy and listened and watched garita breathed easy and listened and watched to her heart's content.

One night in early May the old hurdy-gurdy stopped a block down the street. The moon shone bright and clear; he could see Gemma dim; fantastic and airy, dancing like a sprite. Then the crowd closed round her, and Salvatore lounged far back on the stoop, confidently waiting until she should come. But a few moments later he sat up and scowled. few moments later he sat up and scowled. The crowd was dispersing; the pair had turned and were going back by the way they had come,

This happened five nights. And then one evening slowly the huge bulk of Salvatore reared from the stoop, and with his black felt hat tipped carelessly back on his flaxen head, the stem of his long Dutch pipe in his teeth, and the bowl in his great right hand, he lumbered off from the safe Schneider shop, off into the sparkling night.

Once loosed from his moorings, through the long balmy evenings of May, Salvatore roamed hither and thither; now aimlessly dazed, seeing nothing at all; and not watching life with genial eyes.

Every night in the course of his ramples Salvatore would cautiously loiter into the dark outskirts of a crowd that had gathered round an old hurdy-gurdy. But never once did Gemma notice his presence. Often this colossal moth would approach the flame many times in one night; between his approaches he would make studied detours around tenement blocks, or far down by the docks, strolling out on the end of an empty pier, gazing off into the gleaming old river, and smoking silently, except for now and then a muf-fled grunt of longing. Evening by evening the tinkle and bang of the battered piano floated steadily down the west side of Manhattan, each night farther away from the saug and respectable Schneider abode, each night farther down toward the teeming, scandalous, joyous quarter where live the children of the south. One night in the middle of June, after a slow and sagacious detour, he found the plane waiting just at the head of a long, dark street which he had never entered before. So nar-row it was that the tenement roofs seemed row it was that the tenement roofs seemed meeting above in the distance; below in the canyon for blocks and blocks the pavement was black with a surging mass; and in arches and long festoons, thy lights by thousands were twinkling festive and, fairyllke; and out of it all came the hum of voices so thrilling with gladness that Salvatore pushed back his hat and stood rooted fast to the spot.

In a moment, caught by the tide, he was quickly jostled along. Towering high over all the heads, he looked delightedly this way and that at the swarthy faces, the flashing laughs, and the excited black eyes. All around him the soft flowing speech rose volu-ble, eager and gay. Songs floated lightly about, and shouts and long ringing peals of mirth. At the third corner, on a rough mirth. At the third corner, on a rough platform over the street, a big brass band was booming; below were old women and children and men and girls—a whirling, shrieking throng; and from a fire escape close above two merry scamps were hurling confetti in snowy showers down over the heads.

Suddenly, from behind him, Gemma came spinning on feet light as air, tossing and bending and stamping and banging the old tambourine, circling round him and laughing unsteadily out of her half-closed eyes. In an instant, before he had time to escape. In an instant, before he had time to escape, he found himself in a circle of hundreds of faces; glad shouts of "Gemma! Gemma!" rang from the crowds; and with one flery, upward glance Gemma came spinning straight into his arms, jerked him round merry shrick-and Salvatore was dancing! Tumultuous cheers resounded. From the street all around, from row upon row of windows above, the eyes of his countrymen flashed into his. And with his whole great soul a fiery furnace, he gamboled and pranced and swung his arms; while high above all the shouting, and dominating it all, there suddenly thundered a laugh so pro-digious it tore the air! With one hand clutching Gemma's young arm, his bulging cheeks painitating with glee, the demeanor of Schneider forever lost and the soul of Italy bursting out in his eyes, Salvatore shool sheer joy of life and fairly lowed his mirth!

And truly it was a festival night. Before all the crowd did he kiss Gemma square on her blushing cheek. When in a rage she sprang off in the crowd, he chased her and caught her; seizing the handle of the piano, he turned it furiously round and round, and in sonorous Italian he shouted, "Dance—dance-dance!" Off she whirled, and as the crowd began roaring a ballad in time to her dancing, Salvatore joined in, catching words here and there and laughing between. And when at last the band music was over, Gemma sent home her weary old father; the giant gripped the plano shafts, and together, chuckling, laughing, jabbering fast and low, those two went wandering off in the night

After that, every evening for weeks, Salvatore would sluggishly rise from the Schnei-der home doorstep and lazily drift down the street, turn the corner, hasten his pace, and jog contentedly off to the appointed corner. Gemma was always waiting alone; for her stooping old father, worn by the work of the long, hot day, was only too glad to rest at night. And in the powerful hands of its jovial master the crazy old instrument crashed forth its music as though to pro-claim that the weary old world had had a fresh birth and that life was suddenly daz-

Salvatore, the vagabond, beamed upon life.
Gemma, the witch, began teaching him how to pry into its secrets; with a slowly increasintensity she forced his eyes open and held his gaze as though she would burn the love of it all forever deep into his soul. Sometimes as she danced, Salvatore watched her, all unconsciously his hand on the grinder would revolve faster and faster until, gasping for breath, the girl would stop and seize his arm. And then, quite forgetting the faces around, they would look at each other and laugh till the tears rolled down their glistening cheeks.

Through the midsummer nights the bellowing law n of Salvatore rose above all the street's bedlam of sounds, like a huge adverthe crowd; it doubled the pennies; and when Gemma saw this she taught him to bring it in at just the right moments in perfect accord with her dances and songs. So startling was the effect and so captivating to the simple Italians that, little by little, he added rough jokes of his own, loud, indignant remarks. pathetic roars of appeal to bystanders. And the great voice of the jovial monster, ringing free and glad in his mother tongue, seemed heralding forth to all the world the mirth and the loves and the throbbing life of the happygo-lucky South.

But when at last the streets were hushed, when the fire escapes were filled with the sleepers, the moon sank over the tenement roofs, and the stars grew dim in the misty skies, then Salvatore would go slowly back as though drawn by some irresistible power, back to his neat and snowy couch and sleep and the orderly business life in the shop of his

And here by day, as week followed week over the cheery home there crept an ominous shadow. The anxious parents suspected; but knowing their son, they resolutely refrained from the questions that might only bring on the storm. Margarita was silent and guilty, feeling that she was the source of it all. Otto barely uttered a word, indignantly hacking and sawing his steaks. Only each morning when, in increasing numbers, the bill came back for correction, he carefully looked them over, went to the desk and silently pointed out the mistakes.

And little by little, from the innermost depths of Salvatore's soul, there rose insistent and sharp and clear the still, small voice of

In the ominous silence he scowled. He cowled at the glances that he could feel, at he whispered words that came to his ear. He scowled at every mistake in the bills as it loomed a mute accusing witness under Otto's finger. He melted and burned with the midsummer's heat, he cursed his head that was aching and dull from the sleep he had missed in his various. in his rovings. He ground his teeth and strove to be careful, clear and exact. But in his work the mistakes swelled day by day, and the gloom of the butcher shop deepened. So through the dragging, sweltering weeks a Schneider by day and a Salvatore by night

At last one stiffing morning in August, when the short, rosy finger of Otto pointed to five mistakes in one bill, then up leaped Salvatore! Speechless, he stood all aquiver with mortification and rage. Undaunted, vig ilant, careful, stout little Otto looked steadil up; his breath came hard, but when he spoke his voice was low and solemn:

"So! So-my poy-now you see! No man can attend to his beesness when he is a vagabond effery night! * * * So! * * * And now you must choose." Here Otto suddenly swallowed hard, but his voice was quiet as ever: "You must choose for yourself, my poy," he said. "I will do noddings to boss For one moment longer the giant glared down. Then without warning his head jerked back, the great neck shook, and for the first and only time the house of Schneider rang with that scandalous bellow of mirth. It ended. And Salvatore lurched from his desk and out through the door and went unsteadily, blindly, swiftly up the street. Back in the shop, Margarita stood like one in a dream. Slowly the tears welled in her eyes and trickled down her cheeks. She

Don't —don't be so angry!" Her voice broke in a frightened sob. "Otto," she walled, "I did my best! how could I help being born?"

Again did Otto swallow hard.
"You couldn't help," he said tenderly.
"You vas already born—you couldn't help."
He squeezed her hand reassuringly. "Wait,"

he said, "he will come back, Margarita, he is a goot poy! He will come back!" And little Margarita's sobs gradually sub-sided, she dried her eyes and sat quietly down to her sewing. And after an hour of silent work, she looked up with a guilty light in her eyes.

"Madre de Dio," she thought, "what a magnificent laugh!" And Margarita sighed.

Far and wide did Salvatore roam over
Manhattan that day, dark and lowering, like a bull who has broken his pasture bounds

But at night, haggard and pale, the prodigal came home. He said not a word, but went up to bed, and fell into heavy sleep. The next day he was up bright and early. Without one break or even a grunt he worked at his desk through the long, sultry hours. And that evening, and for three nights thereafter. Salvatore sat on the doorstep, quietly smoking his pipe of peace, of honest repose from a day well spent.

But on the fourth evening, moment by moment, the mountainous bulk of him seemed to tighten. Suddenly, with a breath that was like an explosion, he rose, jammed his broad black hat firmly down over his eyes, and with a look of heroic decision strode off toward the old place of meeting.

Swinging sharply around the corner, he met Gemma face to face. At first she did not see him. She stood by the old hurdygurdy, alone, and staring across the street in a way that made Salvatore stop short. When she saw him, Gemma gave a quick gasp and both hands leaned to her throat. Then her face cleared and relaxed; and looking up into his scowling visage the girl laughed triumphantly, long and low.

But Salvatore was in no joking mood. With a solemn businesslike frown he advanced, took her hand, squeezed it until she winced with the pain, and growled.
"Now I know what I want to do! We will go to a priest, we will be married, and then we will go to my father and mother. Let him try! What can he say? My mother herself was Italian!"

As Gemma looked up, her face slowly changed, grew utterly amazed. For a moment

As Gemma looked up, her face slowly changed, grew utterly amazed. For a moment she seemed to grasp nothing. But all at once her eyes fairly crackled with wrath. "Me?" she gasped. "Like your mother?" "Yes," said Salvatore, suddenly beaming. "Don't be afraid. You can be just the same." "Me? * * Me the same?" She started to laugh, stopped, looked at him again, pursed her red lips and spoke in a tone of withering scorn:

'Salvatore! I have seen your mother in the shop! And rather than be a Signora Schneider like her I would wrap my throat tight, tight in my hair, and pull and pull until I was dead! Ugh!" She threw up both expressive young hands.

Salvatore was dumb
Thrice he tried and could not utter a word.
But as he glared down at Gemma, slowly his cheeks puffed out and out in swelling indigna-cheeks pulled out and out to the cheeks pulled out and out at last. He flounced around heavily and started away.

"No! Salvatore; No—no—no!" Her strong, supple fingers clung tight to one of his arms; the girl was panting between her teeth. An instant she seemed hesitating.
"No!" she whispered. "I will not tell!"

"Tell what?" he asked roughly. She shook has head, and her face broke into a flashing

'Salvatore, come." Her voice was coaxing and tremulous now. "Come. One evening more—only one. It is not so much. When I dance I can think; when I sing I can see! And then I will tell you what we can do! We will find a good way, a beautiful way! Come!

Salvatore! Come! And Salvatore gave in.
That night they hardly knew where they wandered; they barely saw the swarthy faces

pressing close around. The eyes of Gemma kept hungrily turning up to the face of her lover, striving to grip again the vagabond spirit that she had wakened to life. Salvatore himself could feel this part of him rise to respond. But his old self, the old Schneider self of sobriety, order, and thrift, this too rose to the struggle. And while the witch danced till the tenement street was a mass of delighted faces, while she sang with figery heat the old mountain songs that had fiery heat the old mountain songs that had once made him thrill with strange new once made him thrill with strange new dreams and longings, Salvatore stood at his post firm as the ancient Colossus of Rhodes. His face was fixed in a gloomy scowl, through which the new soul of him broke only in faint occasional gleams. And the bellowing laugh was silent now, buried deep in the fortress. Stoutly did the house of Schneider stand the storm that night.

At last when the struggle had gone on for hours, after a desperate tingling effort which brought tremendous applause, when Gemma turned and met as before only that stony expression of gloom, her dusky face grew suddenly white. She came to him swiftly, stamped her foot, threw her lithe young body into a posture of terrible scorn, and with one hand outstretched and shaking, the girl poured forth her pent-up wrath.

the girl poured forth her pent-up wrath. "Now go! Go back to your Schneiders, your sausages, cows—and pigs! Go back! Go to sleep! Grow fatter than all the pigs in the world—and eat! You are good for nothing—nothing—nothing! Go!" Salvatore looked down at his feet, gave short angry laugh, and turned and went

that now were flaming, went into peal upon peal of wild hysterical laughter. "Who," she shouted at last, "who will play while I dance?"

Three gallant countrymen sprang to the grinder. And laughing and shricking in gay little bursts, the airy witch whirled round and round, till the whole street echoed with long and resounding "Bravos!" of applause.
Since then, in the snug little butcher shop, nine long happy years have glided smoothly And now each morning, his books held firmly under his arm, a neat and decorous youngster trots dutifully to school. As an epitaph to the old South and a herald of the new, the town of Enterprise, Ala., poasts a bronze monument to the boll weevil. which has long been regarded as the of the cotton growers. The Mayor of Enter prise, in a letter published by the American Magazine, explains the reason for the monu-"The approach of the boll weevil in 1915

Dr. J. Russell Smith, professor of economic geography at Columbia University, takes the mayor's letter as the text for a scientific prediction as to the future of the Southern

"The saving of the South will come through diversified agriculture," he declares. "More than any other section, it has a great opportunity for easy expansion of agricultural products. The next step forward is for the South to become a dairy and meat-producing region.

While you are fanning yourself, perhaps you may find solace in the fact that there are other places in the world far hotter. The world's hottest spot, according to records cited by Popular Science Monthly, is Azizia, in the semidesert plain of Jefara, northern Africa. There the thermometer rose to 136.4 degrees in the shade on September 13, 1922. The average yearly temperature for the region is 70.8 degrees. ### MAKING "DUMMIES" LIFELIKE

as you stroll about New York, you will find little groups of aimless people halted outside the show windows of the fashion shops of upper Broadway and Fifth avenue, watching the window dressers drape and pose the dummies.

If you linger long in such a group you are bound to hear somebody say: "Don't they look natural, though! I wonder how they make them look so lifelike." Few people realize that the wax ladies of the show windows. who are doomed to pose forever with never a word of protest, are often modeled on the lines of women of flesh and blood, some of them quite famous.

L. E. Oates, a Los Angeles dummy maker, says that many screen stars have posed as the originals for wax clothes models in their time, and some of the most famous living models of the artists of the West Coast have been glad to do likewise.

In making a wax model of a living woman, the first and most difficult step is the securing of a complete and faithful plaster cast of her. A girl's skin is treated with a special preparation, which permits the plaster to register every curve, but prevents it from sticking so closely that the fair model will have to dig it out of her epidermis with penknife afterward.

The plaster is applied in sections, the legs, arms and trunk first being covered. It is allowed to remain on the living form until it hardens. Then it is cut off in sections and then sent to a sort of reassembling room, where, eventually, all the plaster parts are joined together.

In taking the plaster cast the head of the girl is left until the last. It is the most difficult to model. When the artist begins to apply the plaster the girl must assume the expression she wants the dummy to wear, and hold that expression to the end, otherwise the wax model will wear a grotesque, idlotic expression, and the job will be a total loss. While the plaster is on the face, the living model breathes through a small tube inserted in the mouth or nose.

When plaster casts of the girl's body in its entirety have been obtained, they are, as has been indicated, reassembled, and the wax poured in. That is the simplest part of the whole proceeding, and it is accomplished quickly. And then, presto! You have before your eyes a lady in wax who has all the eye-filling curves of the living original.

Of course, the plaster cast is so manipulated that it does not register the hair, the purpose being to get the shape of the girl model's skull rather than her coiffure. An expert hair dresser is called in, and fixes the wax lady up with an appropriate head of hair, long or short, bobbed or shingled. Then the artist in oils arrives. With oils and tempers, he reddens the lips and cheeks of the wax dummy, and gives the body subtle touches of color here and there to simulate the characteristic glow of perfect health. On the fingers and toes he paints nails And then he undertakes the hardest job of all, which is putting the coloring in the eyes

After the final bit of retouching has been done, the wax model is shipped to the shop that ordered it, and there it is at once put on duty in the show window, displaying in turn somebody's corsets, somebody else's hosiery, the newest and fluffiest in lingerie, and maybe evening gowns.

Of Heroes.

70U know the tough part about a Hero is that he has to eat. We take care of them with too much Newspaper space and not enough permanent endowment. We have great fellows back from the War that can show you two Medals for every sack of Flour they have in the House. They got a Foreign Decoration for every American Dollar they have.

Heroing is one of the shortest-lifed professions there is.

Of Liberty.

We do something for every Fool thing in the world. One time in New York I played at a big Benefit to get a Statue of Liberty for Russia. Now can you imagine Russia with a Statue of Liberty? We don't even know if they want one or not. If they do want one, we will loan them ours.

Of Scientists.

I wish those Scientists run the Railroads. It's funny those Guys can tell you just the minute when something is going to happen 10 million miles away and none of them has ever been smart enough to tell you what day to put on your heavy underwear.

They are always studying out what some other Worlds and Planets are doing. Better find out what this one is It's been acting mighty crazy here lately. Long as these Planets and Worlds keep on passing we are all right; it's when they don't pass each other! But that will be too late to do anything

I have often said it is cheaper for America to go to War than it is for us to Confer with anybody. It's funny, but we can talk our heads off until it comes to a time when it means something and then we are as Dumb as an

Of A Great Invention.

Mr. Ford tried his first car out in the room at his boarding house and it made so much noise that Mrs. Ford said it kept Edsel awake. They moved it into the street and since then it has kept Everybody awake.

Of One Famous Year.

In 1914, in addition to Archduke Francis of Austria being assassinated, and causing a war for the least reason that any war had ever been started, why Chauffeurs demanded a room and bath over the Garage for the first time in Automobile History. Germany had some land over in China, so Japan de-clared War on Germany not on account of the shooting of the Archduke, but they thought it would be a good time to get this land, Germany's army being busy somewhere else. So on August 20 Japan declared War on a Nation they had never seen. On August 21, 1914, Rubber Horns on Automobiles were replaced by Sirens. They found Pedestrians were used to the Rubber Honk Honk ones, and could get out of the way, but with the Siren ones they would scare you so bad you would be very little trouble to hit.

Just after Prohibition started in educating people to drink, every one thought when they entertained Guests it was smart to serve Cocktails. Now it's necessary. Unless you use different Guests every time.

Of Muscle Shoals.

Congress has been arguing for years over what to do with Mussel Shells, Ala. Henry Ford made an offer on it one time; so that made Congress think it was worth something. So now the Government is thinking about running it themselves. They think they can do it better than Ford. You just wait until they try making those things and they will see it is not so easy. To see one of those bumping along the road it don't look like it would be hard to make. But I bet you the Government will never make 'em as good as Ford. Mr. Ford was telling me himself how he would work it if he got this Musent Sell. He was going to take these parts all up the River and drop 'em in and let 'em assemble themselves as they went over the Dam. Then he had one older one that would teach the others to swim out on their own power.

Of Wide Open Spaces.

We have had a great deal of ridicule on the stage and kidding in the papers about the expression, "from the wide open spaces where men are men." That of course was started by the boneheadedness of some Scenario Title Writer in the Movies, who would put in such a Title and then the audience would see some wavy haired Bird that had been weaned out of an Ice Box and raised in the shade of a Radiator. Well, regardless of those misleading Titles there are Men out there, and the broader the spaces the more real Men you will find and don't let anybody tell you

Of Rich Men.

All of our disgustingly rich men are at a loss to know what to do with their money. Funny none of them ever thought of giving it back to the people they got it from. Instead of these men giving money to found Colleges to promote learning, why don't they pass A Constitutional Amendment prohibiting anybody learning anything? works as good as the Prohibition one did, in 5 years we would have the smartest race of people on earth.

Of Public Salaries.

The bad part about the whole structure of our paying Public officials is that we name a sum and give them all the same, regardless of ability. other business in the World has a fixed sum to pay all their employes the same salary. Take, for instance, Borah! If our Government was run as a Business and not as a Charity Organization, how much would you have to pay him? How many Congressmen and Senators is he worth to us? Yet he has no chance to get any more money than some Bird who, when sent there, it takes him two years to find the Capitol with a Guide Book. Even his kinfolks back home have to think twice before they can member where he is. If some efficiency expert would work out a scheme where each one would be paid according to his ability, I think we would save a lot of money. I don't know why Mr. Coolidge, as one of his economy measures, has not thought of that. But I guess a fellow in a high position like that can't think of everything.

Of a Proposed Tax,

There should be a Tax on every man that wanted to get a Government appointment or be elected to office. In two years that tax alone would pay our

"Independence" in D. C. By HARRY HITES

"Well, I see that Washington celebrated 'Independence Day' in its own inimitable style," said Capt. Bingle, as he strolled into the office, appropriated the best chair in sight, refused a cigarette and loaded his ca-pacious mouth with a generous portion of pacious mouth with a generous portion of Brown Mule.

"We had a safe and sane Fourth, if that's what you're talking about," the editor remarked, carefully shifting the cuspidor within easy reach of the doughty Captain. "There were plenty of patriotic speeches, nice, calm parades, searchlights playing on the Washington Monument and a lot of fireworks, touched off by experts who guaranteed not to singe one single, solitary eyelash."

"Well, what I don't understand is why any man in the District can celebrate 'Independence Day,' the Captain continued. "In the first place, most of the men in the District are married, and any one who has ever rose up on his hind legs before a preacher or a judge and said 'I will' a few times, knows that there ain't no state of independence in the Matrimonial sea. Having set sail on that same sea on four distinct and momentous occasions, I feel qualified to speak as one having authority.

"But where does this here 'independence' come in for anybody? They even went so far as to give the boys a quarter each (that was a lot in them days) to buy firecrackers, and the boys were allow-ed to shoot them. "Living in the District has its advantages. After a short residence here a man just naturally realizes that he doesn't have to think. It's all done for him. Somebody thinks how fast he can drive his automobile, if he owns one; just when he can go and when he must stop and how long he can stay stopped, if he wants to shep a little. Somebody thinks who will make the best officials to decide on what he shall do. Somebody thinks whether he can display a flag and I'm looking forward to the day (and it don't seem so derned far away, either) when somebody will think what he shall wear. I don't think anybody will ever try to think what the women shall wear, for they wear little enough now and the thinkers, or best minds, or whatever it is that decide things, like the present-day views and also fear the effect of style regulation on the women's vote back in the United States where

BEAUTY AND YOU KEEPING THAT FIRST BLOOM BY Viola Paris

The really young girl should not adopt sophisticated clothes and make-up. She should keep the charm and bloom of youth that are rightly hers.

The other day I saw a little lady who was mourning about her age. She didn't look old, but she had a little sister who was truly young, and her envy was a pityful thing. Her expensively smart and very sophisticated dress didn't comfort her, nor her truly lovely if a bit extravagant jewelry. She smeked one cigarette after another all evening, but these, too, failed to soothe her—And how old do you suppose she was? Twenty!

If she were an isolated case, I shouldn't have bothered to tell you about her, but she's all too lamentably usual. The tragedy of it is that she needn't exist at all, for the youth that she envies in her 16-year-old sister might so easily be hers if she would only exercise a little common sense.

Shedding Ten Useless Years

If I were given a free hand, I should first wash the heavy make-up off this girl's face, then take away her long earrings, change her very low and very formal frock for a little thing in simple chiffon—and she would look at least two years younger than her real age—10 years younger than the 30 she might easily be taken for.

Nowadays, there are easily 25 years during which a woman needs to change very little. From 20 to 45, she can remain slim, smart, youthful. Youthfulness, today, is so com-mon that nobody believes in it! But the authentic bloom that fades somewhere before the average girl's twenty-first or twenty-second birthday—that is another thing. It is something that should be jealously guarded by its possessor, fostered in every way possible, kept as long as all her cleverness can keep it.

These are the rules that are exemplified in the smart younger girls one sees in New York—girls whose families have seen to it that they had a good background to fit them for taking their places in the great world. To transgress these rules is to show oneself not "in the know." In short, it may be said that to be sophisticated before the age of 20 consists in keeping one's clothes

Onion Sleuth on Scent By FRANK SULLIVAN

Today we return to the mystery of the missing Whilk onions. Briefly, the history of the case is as follows: Henry Whilk planted onions in his garden. They failed to appear. Whilk, in a dilemma, notified the police. Inspector Vedder, of Scotland Yard, has arrived and taken charge of the

"The first thing to do," said the inspector, "is to find out who stole the onions. Now, Mr. Whilk, do you know of any person or persons hereabouts who likes onions and who therefore might possibly have a motive for committing the crime?"

"I know of nobody so far," said Mr. Whilk, perplexed. "How about your servants?" asked Vedder.

"I'd trust any of them with my life," declared Whilk. "I know none of the household took those onions."

"Do any of them like onions?" asked Ved-

der. "Well, the cook said once she liked them

stewed."
"Ah," said Vedder, taking out a notebook An, said vedder, taking out a notebook and jotting down a note which read, "Cook likes stewed onlons. Important. Weather mild. See Hawkins about insurance. Remember to bring home thread for Nellie."

Onlons Were Quite Safe.
"Ah," Vedder continued, "so the cook likes stewed onlons, eh? Were the onlons you planted stewed?"
"Oh, no. sir." said Whilk.

"Oh, no, sir," said Whilk. Vedder was plainly disappointed.

"Not stewed, eh. You are quite sure about that, Mr. Whilk?"
"Positive."
"That lets the cook out, then," said Ved-

"That lets the cook out, then," said Vedder, rather reluctantly, and he turned again to the notebook.

"Has anybody an eraser?" he asked. "I have to erase this note I made about the cook now that she has been eliminated from the case. It wouldn't be fair to the cook to have this sort of thing on record if she were innocent, now, would it?"

"No," said Whilk warmly, "it would be a blot on her scutcheon."

"Oh," said the inspector, "has she got a scutcheon?"

"And how," said Whilk. "I have a cousin named Miss Scutcheon

Rafferty," said Inspector Vedder. "She took dope to make her sleep." "You don't mean 'Scutch' Rafferty, stroke of the Wellesley crew in 1894, by any chance,

"I know," objected Mr. Whilk, "but good grief, if all our young college students took to coming into class on their hands and knees where would we be?"

"I don't know," agreed Mr. Vedder, "I guess it would be pretty terrible because the future of our country lies in the hands of these young people." "And how," assented Mr. Whilk.

"You wouldn't mind 'Schutch' coming into class on her hands and knees once in a while," said Inspector Vedder, "but every day! Well, I don't blame the president of the college for getting sore. Wife Takes Steps in Proper Spirit.

"I don't blame him for getting sore," Whilk qualified, "but I dont' think he should have thrown her downstairs." "How many stairs were there in the stairs?"

"Four, I think." "Oh, four wouldn't harm her. I've thrown the wife down as many as twenty stairs."

"That's all right with two old friends like a man and his wife," said Inspector Vedder; "but the president didn't know 'Scutch' well enough to throw her downstairs."

"Well, all I can say is, it's a swell way of getting acquainted." "I'm not here to argue about that," said

Vedder, a bit impatiently. "You go to your church and I'll go to mine. What I'm here for is to locate your onions. Now who's got Several minutes passed, but no eraser ap-

A curious glint came into Vedder's eyes. His chin became hard and jutty. He was now the officer from Scotland Yard, a man not to be trifled with. He tapped ominously on the ground with his foot and gazed severely at every one. He finally spoke, biting each word as it came from his mouth.

"All — I—can—say—is." he declared,

"That — somebody — better—produce—an—eraser—and—produce—it—mighty—quick."

"And how," said Mr. Whilk, trembling and nodding in vigorous agreement with the minion of the law.

The only way to retain this authentic early bloom is resolutely to eschew the "youthful" fashions quite permissible to those who give

Yet how few are clever enough to see it Others sigh and shake their heads at the shoes with dizzy heels and too much trimming that even their 14 year-old daughters that even their 14 year-old daughters want to buy—and generally manage, somehow, to acquire. They sigh, too, when pearls are multiplied, though the single simple string would be so much the better choice. The mother herself uses a good deal of make-up—not because she wants to, but because she has to. The daughter should use york she has to. The daughter should use very little of it, and no lipstick at all—unless the lips are unusually pale, and the stick of her choice merely leaves them with the normal choice merely leaves them with the normal healthy pink look natural to the lips of the average younger girl. She should avoid a hard marcel, too. No smart woman today wants a coiffure that is obviously artificial, but such things reach a height of their undesirability when they are adopted by the truly young. As for plucking the eyebrows—nobody does it any more, except a few pathetic little girls who know no better.

Clothes for the Truly Young. Clothes for the Truly Young,

Hats, too, should be simple. Never a feather, or an effect of much trimming of any kind. The simple hat is the smart hat today, no matter what its wearer's age. Even the elaborately jeweled pin, the final touch of chic for the older woman, is not a wise choice for the young girl. Dresses, simple for everybody should be doubly so for simple for everybody should be doubly so for fresh flower-like perfume, the minimum of jewelry—and—no cigarettes. To smoke like a bonfire may comfort the nervous, older woman trying so hard to be youthful, but the girl who is truly young should leave this indulgence to those who think they need it.

These are the rules that are exemplified to

FINDS GENEALOGY IS MOSTLY "BUNK"

"Tracing one's ancestry is a rank fallacy," declares Albert Payson Terhune, who has just completed a year's study of genealogical research for the American Magazine and is now attacking the growing fad.

"In the first place, the people realize that perhaps millions of ancestors, good and bad, have intervened between themselves and the have intervened between themselves and the illustrious person from whom they claim to have descended," he says in summing up his studies, "Secondly, several million other people, if they took the trouble, could boast of the same lineage. Thirdly, boasting of a great ancestor is a confession of inferiority if the descendant has not lived up to the repute of his forbear.

"The most common ancestral claim," says Mr Tepune illustrating the weakness of the

Mr. Terhune, illustrating the weakness of the average case, "is relationship to William the Conqueror. Simple arithmetic shows these facts:

 "Science allows about 33 years to each generation, which shows that there have been 26 or more generations between a person living today and William the Conqueror, who was in his prime in 1066.

"The descendant had two parents, four grandparents, eight great-grandparents and so on. Continuing to double 26 times, it will show about 40,000,000 ancestors since 1066. So the descendant would have only a four millionth eight to grandparents, blood forty-millionth of the conqueror s mood.
"In all Great Britain and France in 1066

there were not forty million people, so if anyone has had forty million ancestors since that date, he is certainly descended from William. Also he is descended from almost every robber and homicide and mendicant and genius and celebrity who happened to be alive in the conqueror's time and earlier.

"The common fallacy is the result of tracing one particular line and ignoring a thousand other branches of a family. I know of one New Englander who succeeded in tracing his ancestry directly to Adam with just as much accuracy as many have traced theirs back to Charlemagne or other historical

"Another barrier to effective genealogical research is the old time system of family names, adopted from residence or occupation. Thus John Hill, who lived on a hill, and John Church, who lived by the church, may have been the closest relatives, yet their descendants go off on wide tangents in tracing two families" It is far better, says Mr. Terhune, to decree: "I had no ancestors to boast of, but you can bet my descendants are going to have."

A few days after I arived at the farm this nest was occupied by three little birds. I watched the nest every day from a dis tance. One day I decided to examine the little birds more closely, so I went up to the nest and picked up each little one. The mother and father seemed very excited and flew around the trees, screaming as loud as they could, while the babies made almost as much noise. I soon went away, hoping that they would calm down. But the next morning when I came back I found the mother and father still in the tree and still wildly screaming. The babies looked half-starved.

I went away again and the next time l came back I found matters still worse.

The Runaways.

(Honorable Mention.)

Ted and Carol sat on the front steps of their home. Each gazed gloomily into the blue eyes of the other.

"It isn't fair, it isn't. I just think it's too mean for anything," and Carol shook her vellow curls vigorously. Ted stood up and eyed her with all the dignity of his 9 years "I'm going to run away!" he announced.

"Run away! Where to?" queried his siser.
"I don't know, but I'm going to get even

'Can I go? Please let me, Ted," pleaded

"Running away isn't for girls, but I spose you can. C'mon. I guess I got sandwiches enough for both of us."

He held out his hand to the little girl and the two trudged down the walk. At the gate Carol hesitated, but an impatient tug of her arm made her hurry on.

After a morning of ceaseless walking, noon found them in a wood, well away from Lakeville. They ate greedily the meager lunch Ted had provided and, too weary to go on, curled up beneath a tree and slept. When they awake the sup head into sord When they awoke the sun had just set and chill mist was settling over the woodland. "Le's go home," said Carol, pulling her light sweater closer about her.

'W-w-we can't!" stammered Ted. "Why not?

"We're lost!" Carol thereupon began to cry, and Ted watched her helplessly until she cried herself to sleep.

tried in vain to find the route by which they had come into the little clear-ing, but it was growing dark and he dared not venture far from Carol. Suddenly he heard some one calling in the distance. A moment later it came again, this time much closer. The third, it was only a short distance away and he answered holdly. a few minutes he heard a tramping in the brush and several men carrying lanterns.

A tall gentleman stepped forward quickly and took Carol in his arms. "Daddy!" she cried and Ted ran to him eagerly.

"Whatever made you run away, children?" asked Mr. Johnson.

"We heard mother tell Mrs. Morton you and her were going away for a long time and leave us home, and we wanted to get even," answered Ted.

Their father laughed merrily.

"What a joke! What you overheard was part of a play your mother is rehearsing!"

The mother and father had flown away and the babies were just letting out an occasional peep. I thought perhaps there might have been an enemy of the birds around that had scared them away, but after looking all over the vicinity of the nest I couldn't find any disturbing element, so I went home again.

The next time I came I was horrified to find the little birds dead. I couldn't imagine why the mother had left them to starve, so I went around worrying about it all day. That night I told the story at the supper table, and one of the men asked me if I had touched the little ones. I told him I had. Then he said that was the trouble, for some birds will never come back to their nest if it has been touched by human hands. Since that day I have never gone nearer than 10 feet of any nest, and I think if you are a real friend of the birds the best thing you can really do for them is to leave them entirely alone until the little birds have

The Vengeance of a Fairy.

Once upon a time a fairy became very angry at a young prince and swore that she would have vengeance on all mortals.

She made a large glass castle in which she placed a small pearl. One looking into the castle saw instead of a small pearl one as large as a tea cup, as the glass magnified it many times.

The castle was guarded by fierce dragons, and as years passed many men lost their lives trying to obtain the great pearl.

In a land not far away from the castle there ruled a king, who, every year, sent one of his subjects to try to get the pearl. So great was his wish to possess the pearl that, in order to make every one whom he sent put forth his best efforts, he beheaded al who failed.

In this kingdom many fruits were raised, and as the birds sometimes ate the fruits they were very much hated, and all who could

CHILDREN SHOULD AIM AT GOOD CITIZENSHIP

Dear Post Boys and Girls:

Dear Post Boys and Girls:

Now that the Fourth of July is over and we, like John Hancock, have signed the Declaration of Independence in a large hand, we can write in just as large a hand our determination to be worthy of those brave and intrepid men who dared to sign the great American Magna Charter of 1776 which gave us the life and liberty we now, as citizens of the United States of America, enjoy.

The first precept of a good citizen is to be respectful to the institution of the gov-ernment and to obey the laws which the citizens themselves make.

One of the things our forefathers did was to decide that they wanted liberty for this country and to go ahead and work for it even up to the British cannons' mouths.

It is now a very good time for the boys and girls to decide what they want for the Nation and for themselves and to work out what they want to be when they grow up. In this day when every one who has had experience in educational matters is advocating special vocational training, there is an inclination among the young, which is happily fostered by most parents, to have an education or vocational goal in view and to work toward that. No longer are children told to attend only to the matter in hand and let the future take care of itself. After the primary and preparatory grades of school are passed the wise boy or girl directs his or her thoughts to reading and even recreation, so that they may be of advantage in the future career.

Of course, there is no reason to make hard and fast rule too soon for the future, for youth must find out just what it wants by investigation and learning, but even in this "sampling about" they must give serious thought to the future.

Many of the schools and school systems recognize for the girls the high calling of wife and mother and home maker and in-clude that in the courses not only in the graded and high schools but in our colleges graded and high schools but in our colleges and universities and the private schools as well. This training can never be wasted and the girl who wants to be a good citizen will be anxious to be proficient in these arts whether or not she hopes to become a professional or business woman or a home maker. In fact, it is a rule that while many women are taking their places in the wide world outside of the homes, the vast majority still have home duties and fulfill them as efficiently as they did in the old days when women's activities ended at her front door. In passing it might be well to mention when women's activities ended at her front door. In passing it might be well to mention that the boys' schools and colleges are recognizing the importance of teaching their students the principles and ethics of home building and fatherhood, knowledge which will stand them in as good stead in their busy lives as that taught to women students.

Every one seemed happy, but in one of the houses was a very bewildered little girl.

"Surely you know, Peg. "Tis that every one knows what happens today," said her brother, who then left.

"Oh, and is it that I will not find out when I have tried so hard to," said Peggy to herself. She decided she could watch the others, even though she didn't know what it was

A Spring Picnic.

(Honorable Mention.) Flora was awakened by the alarm clock early Sunday morning. She was so happy for everything that she sang while she bathed and dressed for church. At last she was ready. Flora ran lightly down the steps, where her friend Violet was waiting patiently.

"Oh, Violet, I'm so glad you can go. Did your mother pack you a nice lunch for our picnic?" cried Flora. "Yes, I've got chocolate cake, peaches, chicken and everything. But come on, we'll be late for church," said Violet. After church the two girls boarded a street car which took them to the country. Flora and Violet got off the street car after a fivemile ride. They then started off in the di-rection of the woods.

"Oh, what a beautiful place!" exclaimed

Flora.

"Aren't these little blue bells and pink moccasin flowers beautiful? I don't think I'll ever be able to go home and leave them all here," said Violet.

After the girls had looked around for new flowers and birds they became quite hungry, so they started preparations for lunch. Flora spread the covered grass with sandwiches, cake, fruit, olives, pickles, potato salad, cold chicken and tomatoes, while Violet went off with a bucket to hold water for the lemonade. At the spring Violet filled her bucket with

The girl stooped over and picked up a beautiful robin, which in some way had broken its wing. She carried it carefully back to Flora. "I can't answer all your questions now, but this much I will tell you. We'll give this little robin something to eat then we will take it home." exclaimed Violet.

After the girls had eaten they packed up their things and, holding the bird, left for lower.

A few weeks later the girls went back to be country with the bird. Flora and Violet ad decided to free the robin when it was able to fly.

When school closed Flora and Violet went to the country which they loved so well. There they saw the robin which they had betriended.

BELGIUM TRIPLES YEARLY ALLOWANCE GIVEN KING ALBERT

Brecial to The Washington Post.

Brussels, July 9.—When the Belgian cabinet recently decided to place a measure before parliament increasing King Albert's yearly allowance from 3,500,000 francs, or $266,000, the government actually was but taking cognizance of the uncomplaining, cheerful willingness with which the entire royal family has subjected itself to extreme economy during Belgium's trying postwar years. In 1927 the King of the Belgians was receiving the same allowance which was in vogue when he ascended the throne in 1909—this despite the terrification of the Belgian currency and the equally marked upward trend of the cost of living.

To the average person an income of $98,000 would seem quite sufficient even for a person of state. But those who know the wide generosity of King Albert and Queen Elizabeth to the countless needy among their people; who also know the ceaseless demands of all kinds which are incumbent upon the king, even of small Belgium, know that the royal family has passed the last few years with as strict necessity of thrift as many families of the common people.

King Uses Motorcycle. Special to The Washington Post.

King Uses Motorcycle. King Uses Motorcycle.

For many months King Albert has used a motorcycle on all unofficial occasions to save the cost and upkeep of additional luxurious sedans. Queen Elizabeth usually has gone shopping on foot, even visited the poor without the use of a motor car. Instead of dashing sport models, Crown Prince Leopold has obtained most of his recreation on a bleycle, with a rare turn on horseback.

A large saving has been made by the king returning to the state his summer palace at Ostend for the purpose of transforming it into a children's home, At the king's castle of Ciergnay in Luxemburg all expenses have been cut to a minimum, even eliminating the royal hothouses, which for years have been one of its attractions.

In view of the self-imposed economies on every side which Belgium's royal family has exercised, it is not difficult to understand that even the socialist members of the government and Parliament are anxious to have the king's allowance raised to its proper proportions. But it was not until the Belgian franc had been stabilized and the nation's financial situation im-proved that Albert would consent to this.

Luxemburg Rulers in Poverty.

An example of much greater hard-ship for royalty may be found in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, on the southeast border of Belgium, where the Grand Duchess Chariotte and her prince consort (brother of the former Empress Zita of Austria) live in genu-ine poverty. The grand duchess had invested her entire fortune in German war loans, even selling saveral proper-invested her entire fortune in German war loans, even selling several properties of the duke's family in New York before the United States entered the war, and as a result virtually all their resources were wiped out.

Almost all their property has been sold and the grand duchess and prince would not even own a motor car if the little state did not pay for it. To add to the household's income, Prince Felix is forced to work as an automobile salesman and to sell wood for a living.

German Women Open Bobbed Hair Conflict

Berlin, July 9 (By A. P.).—Bobbed hair and short skirts started a violent conflict within the feminine ranks of the Stahlhelm, the German legion of war veterans.

the Stahlhelm, the feminine ranks of the Stahlhelm, the German legion of war veterans.

The provincial groups of the Koenigin Luise Bund, as the woman's branch of the legion is called, were stirred to indignation by the bobbed hair and short skirts worn by their patriotic sisters in Berlin. A resolution setting forth what they regarded as the error of the Berliners' ways was promptly dispatched to Berlin.

Members of the Berlin branch, however, turned like the proverbial worm. After stressing their generous hospitality to the many thousands of war veterans at the recent "Steel Helmet" demonstration in Berlin, they withdrew from the Koenigin Luise Bund and formed an organization of their own under the name of "Lupisenbund." Abbreviated hair and skirts are not viewed with disfavor in the new "yerein."

Prisoner Gives Note To His Wife by Kiss

Paris, July 9 (By A. P.).—A kiss in the dark got a Frenchman out of prison the other day.

The prisoner, Fritz Gabril, had been behind the bars for two years and had several more to serve. His wife came to see him. At the leavetaking in the dark corridor Gabril and his wife embraced with especial warmth, the parting kiss being so movie-like in length that the guards noticed it and were moved.

Gabril had a slip of paper in his cheek. It passed his wife's lips during the embrace. On the paper was writ-

the embrace. On the paper was whiten:

"Tomorrow, during the recreation hour, I will jump over the wall. Have a vehicle waiting for me on the other-side of the moat."

Mrs. Gabril had the vehicle. Her husband got away and hasn't been heard of since. She was detained by the authorities.

Socialists Assail Insignia of Kaiser

Berlin, July 9 (By A. P.).—Former William II has again stirred the socialists. They have introduced an interpellation in the Prussian diet charging him with "an abusive usurpation of former royal insignis of rank."

The cause of the trouble lies in an ordinance by the president of the former royal board of the Prussian exchequer. Claiming to act on behalf of the former King of Prussia, the president ordered all head foresters subordinate to him to continue wearing the same uniforms as during the imperial regime. He especially enjoined them to retain the old royal Prussian eagle on their equipment and the royal coat of arms on their buttons.

The socialists point out that the former kaiser, by his abdication, has ceased to be king of Prussia and is now a private person. Among other things they contend the ordinance conflicts with the country and forest policing law of 1926, which prescribes the kind of uniforms to be worn by foresters.

This New Way is Changing the Hygienic, Habits of Millions - Now Positive Protection,

Plus an End to the Problem of Disposal

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, Registered Nurse

You wear gayest, sheerest gowns without fear; you meet every social and business exactment in peace-of-mind and comfort, this adopted Kotex.

The name is Kotex. Doctors urge it. Nurses employ it. Women find in it the scientific solution of their oldest hygienic problem. Its use will make a great difference in your life.

What Kotex is Unknown a few years ago, 8 in every 10 women in the better walks of life have discarded the insecure "sanitary pads" of yesterday and

Filled with Cellucotton wadding, the world's super-absorbent, Kotex absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture. It is 5 times as absorbent as the ordinary cotton pad. It discards easily as tissue. No laundry—no embarrassment of disposal.

It also thoroughly deodorizes, and thus ends all fear of offending. Only Kotex itself is "like" Kotex It is the only sanitary napkin embodying the super-absorbent Cellucotton wadding. It is the only napkin made by this company.

See that you get the genuine Kotex at better drug and department stores everywhere simply by saying "Kotex." Comes in sanitary sealed packages of 12 in two sizes, the Regular and Kotex-Super. Supplied also through vending cabinets in rest-rooms by West Disinfecting Co.

Different from every other ginger ale

No MERE accident of fate has given "Canada Dry" the qualities which make it so delightfully cooling and refreshing, and so different from every other ginger ale.

"Canada Dry" enjoys the rare distinction of being a real ginger ale, made from the highest grade Jamaica ginger.

No biting capsicum (red pepper)—the cause of the unpleasant burning taste of ordinary ginger ales-mars the fine flavor of "Canada Dry."

Because of its purity and quality, this fine old ginger ale is a drink to sip and relish as you would a rare old wine. . . . A drink not merely to quench your thirst, but to refresh and invigorate—to add a touch of joy and joviality to every occasion—to gladden your days and nights the whole year through.

Serve it tonight at dinner, and note the zest it adds to the meal. The very sparkle of it is a lure to lagging appetites. The ginger in it is really good for you.

This age finds distinction in Camels

THERE is pride in using the best, whether a golf ball, motor-car or a cigarette. That's why modern smokers prefer Camels. There's an added pleasure in the Camel tobaccos and the knowledge that there are no choicer grown. There's a sense of perfection and well being in this famous blend, unpurchasable elsewhere at any price.

Modern smokers, after searching the world for the enjoyable smoke, have placed

Camels first, and there is a world of pride in their selection. No other cigarette is good enough for present-day Camel smokers. No other completely satisfies the particular, modern taste.

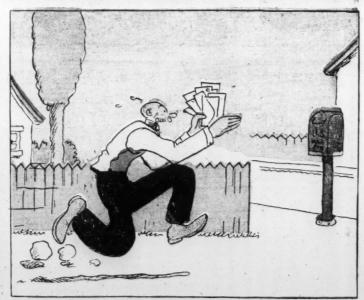

If you don't yet know these popular cigarettes, we invite you to try them. Their goodness will always bring you a distinctive pleasure. This cigarette is the modern expression of quality. "Have a Came!"
